AFTER BIG FISH COMBINE.

Ohio Will Try and Rule the Booth Co. Out in That State.

Columbus, Ohio, July 2.—Suit has been brought by Attorney-General Ellis to oust the so-called fish trust of the great lakes, commercially known as A. Booth & Co. of Chicago, from its charter in Ohio.

The Attorney-General charges that the company has purchased the business of its competitors and controls 90 per cent. of the fresh water fish business carried on from the Mississippi to Buffalo. It has been in operation four years, during which time it has reached out into Canada. It has taken in the business of about sixty dealers in fresh water fish.

The petition states that the corporation seeks to engage in about forty different kinds of business under its charter, from making glue to becoming surety on the bonds for individuals.

DECISIVE NAVAL BATTLE BETWEEN THE TWO FLEETS.

Decisive Engagement Waging Between Che Foo-Port Arthur.

Kuroki's Troops are Now Within Twenty Miles of Liaoyang—Armies Are Moving Cautiously and Positions May Completely Change—Russian Centre Going North—Japs Lose, According to Russian Advices, 1,000 Men in Slaopingtao Attack.

Che Foo, July 2.—What should prove to be a decisive naval engagement was in progress yesterday afternoon, midway between Che Foo and Port Arthur.

The steamer Che Foo, which has arrived here, passed within fifteen miles of the Japanese fleet, consisting of two battleships and five cruisers, all actively engaged.

The Russian fleet was not seen, but the distance of the Japanese fleet from land precludes the possibility of any attack on the land batteries.

The captain of the Che Foo says he heard a terrific explosion, but was unable to discern whether a Japanese or a Russian ship was affected.

A Chinaman who left Port Arthur Thursday night says there are only four Russian warships, cruisers and battleships in the harbor and none outside. The opinion prevails that the faster ships eluded the five Japanese warships maintaining the blockade.

Japs 20 Miles From Liaoyang.

Liaoyang, July 2.—Gen. Kuropatkin and Gen. Kuroki are moving their troops like men on a chessboard. The Japanese are now twenty miles from Liaoyang. The rains are impeding their movements.

Detachments totalling 1,200 men have been detailed from Gen. Rennenkampf's Cossacks to scout in the defiles and hills, harrassing the Japanese and not allowing any rest day or night.

Kuroki's army is extremely active east of the Russian position and the Russians are correspondingly active. The Russian centre is being rapidly pushed northwards to a point where Kuropatkin established his base after the battle at Vafangow. So far as the Russians know, Kuroki is steadily pushing onwards through all the mountain passes, even towards Mukden.

Preparations at all points are now practically complete. The demonstrations made during the last few days against the Russian left flank threaten to completely change the position of the two armies.

Notwithstanding four days' rain the troops are still being moved.

Denies Russian Loss.

St. Petersburg, July 2.—Major-Gen. Pflug, telegraphing from Mukden, under date of July 1, says:

"The reports from foreign sources that the Japanese fleet sank several vessels of our squadron on June 23 and that our loss included Rear-Admiral Prince Ouktomsky and 700 sailors are absolutely untrue."

Confirmed From Tokio.

Tokio, July 2.—The Russian Vladivostock squadron, consisting of three cruisers, one torpedo boat destroyer and nine torpedo boats, after shelling the Village of Gensan Thursday, was later reported off Anpen (about 15 miles to the east of Gensan), proceeding in a southeasterly direction. Its destination is not known.

Seoul, Corea, July 2.—Additional reports from Gensan show that only two Coreans and two Japanese were slightly injured and two dwellings burned as a result of the bombardment by the Russian Vladivostock squadron.

Mukden, Thursday, June 30.—(Delayed in Transmission.)—Heavy fighting is reported to have occurred near Port Arthur, June 26, resulting in the Russian withdrawal from Quinsanshan after severe losses on both sides.

The Japanese fleet approached Slaopingtao, midway between Port Dalny and Port Arthur in the morning of June 26 and bombarded the coast north of the bay so far as Uitseloshan. Strong Japanese forces which had been landed then attacked the neighboring heights, which were occupied by Russian riflemen.

Three times the Japanese were driven back with heavy losses, but the Russians were forced to retire from their main position near Quinsanshan. The Japanese reinforced their advance guard and pressed the attack. After several fruitless assaults on Quinsanshan, the Japanese commander sent a strong column along the central road from Dalny to Port Arthur with the object of turning the Russian left, forcing the Russians to retire.

The Russians lost seven officers and nearly two hundred men killed. The Japanese losses are believed to have been at least 1,000, as during the battle they passed over a mine which the Russians successfully exploded.

Claim Four Sunk.

Liaoyang, Thursday, June 30.—(Delayed in Transmission.)—Russian advices from Port Arthur say that the Russian Port Arthur squadron consisting of eleven ships attacked the Japanese squadron of eighteen ships, June 23, sinking four of the Japanese torpedo boats and inflicting damage on the other vessels. The Russian ships returned to Port Arthur. Not a single large vessel, it is added, was damaged.

Kuropatkin Decides Not to Fight.

Newchwang, July 2.—A telegram from German sources at Mukden received here Thursday evening says Gen. Kuropatkin has decided not to fight at Tatchekiao or Haicheng, but to retreat from Tatchekiao, which movement was started June 28 and is well under way. Small detachments of troops will, it is stated, stay south to stem the Japanese until the Russian retreat is in full swing. It is not believed that the Russians will be able to reach Liaoyang, as the Japanese control the passes, which would indicate that the Russian line of communication may be cut.

Kuropatkin Reports.

St. Petersburg, July 2.—The Emperor has received the following despatch from Gen. Kuropatkin, dated June 30:

"Torrential rains fell in the Tatchekiao district June [illegible] and on the roads from Tachikiao to Sinyen, inundating our bivouac. The Japanese are advancing slowly in different directions towards our east and south fronts.

"On the south the Japanese are advancing eastward, with the object of effecting a junction with Kuroki's army.

"It has been ascertained by a reconnaissance in the direction of Dalin Pass that the Japanese have retired some distance from the positions recently occupied by them. Their covering forces, consisting of several companies, retired after a short fusillade.

"A report from the direction of Fengwangcheng, June 29, announced that an energetic advance of the Japanese forces had been discovered towards Wafanhaun and the Linhosin Pass.

"The rains continue."

Japs Evacuated Dalin.

Liaoyang, June 30 (delayed in transmission).—Gen. Kuropatkin, with reinforcements, personally moved towards Dalin Pass, whereupon the pass was evacuated by the Japanese and re-occupied by the Russians.

Some Roads Impassable.

Liaoyang, July 2.—The Chinese say the real rainy weather season has begun. The roads in some place are absolutely impassable.

The Japanese have retired from Dalin Pass and are moving in a northeasterly direction on the Liaoyang road. They have appeared in great force at Fenshui and Motien Pass, outflanking the Russian positions.

The Russian eastern divisions continue to retire before superior numbers, but are keeping in close touch with the enemy.

Lost 300,000 Lbs. Flour.

Liaoyang, July 2.—During a recent typhoon in the Sea of Japan, 27 barges belonging to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha of [illegible] 000 pounds of flour intended for the Japanese armies.

Trolley Kills Aged Woman.

Toronto, July 2.—A peculiarly shocking fatality occurred on Avenue road Thursday night at about 9 o'clock, when Mrs. Elizabeth Ward of 188 Macpherson avenue was killed by Avenue road car, No. 697, in charge of Motorman Charles Burch and Conductor Ernest Ford. Mrs. Ward was crossing from the west to the east side, and the unfortunate woman fell as she was crossing the tracks, and the car, which was traveling backward at the time, ran over her, the wheel passing over her head. She died within ten minutes.

Watts, the Painter, Dead.

London, July 2.—George Frederick Watts, the painter, died of bronchitis yesterday afternoon. He was born in London in 1817 and retired in 1896. He presented to the nation the greater part of his life's work, now on view in the National Gallery of British Art.

THE AUDITOR-GENERAL.

The worry and persecution to which the Auditor-General has been subjected to during the rule of Gritism in Ottawa has driven him to seek retirement from official life.

Why has his life been made unbearable by his political friends? The answer is to be found in his Annual Reports to Parliament, and may be summed up in a few words. He refuses to be made the scape-goat to cover up attempts to misappropriate and spend illegally public money, hence he must be got rid of.

"The reports of the Auditor-General, which cannot be suppressed," says a contemporary, "make clear the reason of this campaign. A couple of instances will suffice to show what frequently happens. In the Sorel Bridge affair Mr. Prefontaine claimed that the structure had cost $243,000, towards which a subsidy of 15 per cent. had been voted. The Auditor discovered that the actual cost was $98,171, and thus cut "$22,000" off the subsidy. Another famous case is the contract for light and power on the Cornwall Canal. Under a contract made by the Conservative Government this service was to be obtained for $15,860. The Liberals cancelled this contract and made another amounting to $52,575 per annum, for seventy-nine years. Curiously enough the new contract was made three weeks BEFORE POLLING DAY DURING THE GENERAL ELECTION OF 1900. Services which were never rendered were to be paid for. By delaying payment and pressing for investigation the Auditor-General forced a modification of the arrangement, which saved the country $1,026,625."

Mr. McDougall is a Liberal of the old school, and not of the present mongrel crew. He refuses to aid the latter in their raids on the public revenue, hence his life is made so miserable that he resigns in disgust.

Jesse Lewisohn, of New York, is a discreet and learned collector of pictures. The other day he was conversing with Robert Henri, the painter.

"Art galleries and exhibitions," Mr. Lewisohn said, "are interesting places to haunt. I wish I had noted down all the odd comments I have heard in them.

"Only last week I stood behind two young women from the country in a Fifth Avenue picture shop. One of them called the other's attention to an atrocious animal piece.

"'Two dogs, after Landseer,' she read from the frame. 'I can see the two dogs, but where is Landseer?'

The other young woman studied the painting closely.

"'Where is he?' she said. 'I guess this must be one of them puzzle-pictures!'"

Capt. Norton Goddard, the energetic reformer, of the New York, puts little trust in mental healing, faith cure, and such like movements.

"A mental healer once," said Captain Goddard, recently, "called at a house where an old man lay very ill.

"'What is the trouble with the old gentleman?' he said to the servant who answered his ring.

"'He has rheumatism, sir,' the girl replied.

"'Oh, no,' said the healer, impatiently. 'He hasn't rheumatism. He only thinks he has it. There is no such thing as rheumatism. May I go up and talk to him?'

"The servant made enquiry, and said on her return that it would be impossible for the healer to see the sick man. Accordingly he went away, but in a few days he came back to try again. The same servant opened the door for him.

"'Well,' he said, 'does the old gentleman still persist in the delusion that he has rheumatism?'

"'No, sir,' the maid answered. 'The poor man thinks he is dead now. We buried him yesterday.'"

"To the town of Norridgewock, in Maine," said the Rev. Minot J. Savage, of New York, "a strange minister came to preach. He preached duly and, after the sermon was over, he mingled with the congregation, expecting that some one would invite him to dinner.

"One by one, however, the congregation departed, offering the hungry minister no hospitality, and he began to feel anxious. Where was he to eat?

"As the last deacon was leaving the church, the minister rushed up to him and shook him warmly by the hand.

"'I want you to come home and dine with me,' the minister said.

"'Why, where do you live?' said the deacon.

"'About thirty miles from here.'

"The deacon reddened. 'Oh, you come and dine with me instead,' he said."

Joaquin Miller, the poet has a collection of original documents that shed a light on many odd phases of early Western life.

Among these documents is a letter that a New England youth wrote in 1860 from Oregon to his father. The letter treats at great length of the scarcity of women in the West, and of the general desire to marry that prevailed among the Westerners of that day. It has for postscript:

"Say, pap, it might be a good idea to get the girls some new teeth and send them out here."

Stories of railroad accidents were being told and among them we repeat one, an error in diagnosis. "In a certain collision one of the victim lay for a long time on his back across the ties. Finally two men picked him up, carried him to the station and placed him on the floor.

"'He'll lie easier here,' they said, 'till the doctor comes.'

"The doctor came a little later.

"'This poor chap is done for, I'm afraid,' he said, glancing at the prostrate victim.

"Then he knelt down, lifted one of the man's closed eyelids, and peered into a dull, blank, unseeing, lifeless eye.

"'Yes, he's dead all right. Take him away,' said the doctor.

"But the pale lips of the injured man moved slightly, and a feeble voice murmured:

"'That was my glass eye, you fool.'"

MANY THANKS.

(Picton Gazette.)

Mr. James D. Ford, of the Belleville Intelligencer, is now rusticating at Wellington, where cool breezes abound and the fishing (if he will only get pointers from uncle Will. McDonald) is reported as excellent. The holiday season in that vicinity, with his fish eating propensity, ought to fill his brain so full with "Timely Topics" as to cause the people of Belleville to rejoice at the volume of wit and sarcasm which will emanate from his pen when he returns to duty.

The cheerful idiot of the Kingston News and Times, requiring some brain case, hands Belleville the following:

HOW DID BELLEVILLE GET ITS NAME?

For some time past, strenuous efforts have been made to find the exact derivation of the word "Belleville." Several authorities on languages have volunteered the following opinions:

Belleville — from Belle villa, a fine resting place, a place where hammocks are slung, for people to snooze in.

Belleville — formerly Bellowville—Bellow, windy, ville, city — the Windy City, or the gassy city.

Belleville—at one time Bell-ville, Bell, a clanging instrument—ville, a city—in other words a ding-dong town.

Belleville—at one time Belle-vielle—Belle, fine or dear—vielle, the French for old lady,—a dear old lady.

Additions to the list will be gladly received.

J. ARTHUR MARSH

The African Review is authority for the statement that "in the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony, if the present rate of intermarriage between Briton and Boer is kept up, within twenty years the two races will be so welded together as to be indistinguishable."

The Only Thing He Lacks.

Almost every man honestly believes that if, in addition to his own ability, he could have the brass of his rival, no earthly position would be too high for him to reach.

She Knew Them All.

Agent—Madam, could I sell you this book of fairy tales? Mrs. Muchwed—No. I've been married four times, and fairy tales are a chestnut with me.

Would Never Do.

Husband—If you are not going to use that gown, why don't you give it to the cook? Wife—Oh, no! It's out of style.

At the bottom of good manners there are always three things—self sacrifice, self control, self respect.

The Horse In Action.

Did you ever think, says a horseman, how fast a horse in a 2:20 gait moves his feet? When a horse is trotting a 2:20 gait his feet move a little faster than a mile in 1:10. As his body is moving at 2:20, and as each of his feet when in contact with the ground is stationary and then is picked up and moved forward to take the next step, the foot must move as much faster than the body as to make the step, which is over twice as fast. Now, the action is: The foot is at rest upon the ground and is raised some one or two feet high, then forced forward nearly the full length of the leg, then lowered to the ground and is at rest for nearly two-thirds of the time that the next step is being taken. The time, nearly two-thirds, I think, is too long, but it is from one-half to two-thirds of the next step

The Horse.

The reins may guide the horse, the bit may inspire him by its careful manipulation, and the whip may urge him forward to greater ambition, but the human voice is far more potent than all these agencies. Its assuring tones will more quickly dispel his fright, its sharp, clear, electric commands will more thoroughly arouse his ambition, and its gentle, kindly praises will more completely encourage the intelligent road horse than the united force of the bit and reins and the lash. No animal in domestic use more readily responds to the power of kindness than the road horse.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

The day's duties over she rests in her chair.
And thinks of the doses that doctors prepare.
To her children when sick no doctor she'll bring;
She has proved beyond doubt "Abbey's Salt" is the thing.

ABBEY'S SALT is especially suited to children. It is made from fruit juices—contains no calomel, or other powerful drugs—and is pleasant to take. It is a tonic laxative— NOT a purge or violent cathartic. It may be taken every morning by children, as well as grown folk, without fear of ill-effects.

It corrects all the bowel troubles of childhood —prevents cramps—keeps the little ones fresh, rosy and healty.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

TO SET YOUR LIVER WORKING RIGHT

is absolutely imperative if you are to get any comfort from life or nourishment from food. A torpid liver can be a very dangerous condition and should not be neglected. Few medicines act as thoroughly, promptly and safely as Beecham's Pills. They are vigorous but mild, and cause no inconvenience or nausea.

TO BE RID OF CONSTIPATION

There is no remedy quite as good as Beecham's Pills, not only to loosen the bowels but in the after effects. There is no binding up afterwards, as these Pills aid Nature in a natural way. Persons chronically constipated can become regular and be rid of the consequent discomforts formerly theirs by use of BEECHAM'S PILLS.

good many ways also that will advance you even faster than steady reading."

He was surprised at the look of pleasure that came into Frank's face.

"I had half expected you would try to discourage me," said he, "and it's very kind of you to promise to help me."

"Why shouldn't I?" answered Page. "I owe you a good deal more than that, my dear boy, and when you have been admitted we will go into a partnership if you want to do it."

"Here's my hand on it," said Frank, rising, "and I mean it, too, and if you will have patience with me I'll stick it out or own up I'm no good in this world." He seemed overjoyed, and for two hours they sat and talked it over. "When may I begin?" he said finally. "I want to go at it right away."

"Tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock sharp," replied Albert, smiling, "and I warn you I shall keep you grinding eight full hours six days a week and no let up until July 1. But tell me, when did this idea enter your head?"

"Well, to be exact, it came to me in the parlor of your house in Sandgate just at dark the last evening I was there, and a remark your sister made to me was the cause of it."

A droll smile crept over Albert's face at this frank admission, but he made no reply, and as he scanned his friend's face, now turned slightly away from him, and recalled that last evening at home and how Alice had so persistently devoted herself to the entertainment of this young man, a revelation came to him.

"So it's that heart breaker's blue eyes that have begun to work mischief in Frank's feelings, is it?" he said to himself after he had left the club, and he almost laughed aloud at the thought. "Sis has some rather pronounced ideas about idleness, and maybe she has read my young friend a lesson in a few words. She is capable of it!"

"Here's my hand on it."

When Frank came to the office next morning, Albert set him to work and gave him all possible encouragement.

"I think far more of you, Frank," he said earnestly, "for this resolve, and when you get fairly into it you will be glad you took hold. I believe every one in this world is happier and healthier for having an occupation, and certainly you will be."

Frank showed a persevering spirit as the weeks went by and became an ardent student. In a way, too, he was a help to Albert, for he could call on him any time to find some references or some decision bearing on a case in hand.

It was soon after Frank's new departure in life that Alice received a letter from her brother, and among other things he wrote:

> What was it you said to Frank the last evening of our visit at home? He has decided to study law in my office and admits his resolution to do so was the result of a remark you made then. Knowing what a fine vein of sarcasm you are blessed with, I am curious to know what sort of an arrow you drew from your quiver that evening.

But Albert received no reply to his question.

CHAPTER XVI.

ALICE PAGE'S first impression of Frank Nason did not do him justice. She thought him a big, good natured, polite boy, rather conscious that he was likely to be sought after and disposed to sulk if he wasn't. His plea for sympathy on the score that his life of idleness was a bore, which he made the day they went sleighing, only provoked her derision, and as she was disposed to judge all men by the standard of her self reliant brother, he came near awakening contempt on her part. It was not until the last evening of his visit that she discovered her mistake and realized that he had more depth of character than she had thought. It is likely the keen enjoyment which he seemed to feel when she sang for him had weight, for we are prone to like those who like us, and it was natural also that she should feel a little gratitude for what he had done for her brother.

Her life, hidden as she was in a byway corner of a country town and seeing no one all the week except her small band of pupils, gave her plenty of time for thought. Once a week, usually on Saturday, she received a letter from her brother, and that, together with the mild excitement of Sunday churchgoing, was all that broke the monotony of her life.

A week after the Christmas visit she received a package containing a new book, three of the latest popular songs and a box of candy, and pinned to the candy Frank Nason's card, on the back of which was written, "For the girl who wanted to kiss her teacher."

She wrote a polite note of thanks. It was midwinter and two weeks after her brother wrote that Frank had begun studying law in his office when she received a letter from that young man that surprised her. He wrote:

> My Dear Miss Page—I trust you will pardon me for intruding myself upon you, but I wish you to know that a few pointed words spoken by you while I was enjoying your hospitality have not been forgotten and have influenced me to make an effort to be something better than an idler in the world. Your brother kindly consented to let me read law in his office, and I am now hard at it. I do not imagine this will interest you, but I felt that you had scant respect for useless people, and as you could rightly so regard me I wanted you to know that I am capable of rising above my aimless life.
> I have recalled so many times all the little incidents of my visit to your home and lived over those evenings graced by your presence and lit by a cheerful fire time and again. Do not think me insincere when I assure you that they were the most delightful ones I ever passed. If you find time to write a line to one who is now a worker in the hive instead of a drone, it will be gratefully received by me.

To a girl with Alice Page's sympathetic nature and tender feelings words like these made her feel she was what she most enjoyed being—an inspiration and help to others. In this respect Frank Nason had read her better than she had read him, or else some fortunate intuition had led him aright. She answered the letter at once, thanking him for his flattering words, but forbidding him to use any more of them.

"I do not like flattery," she wrote, "because no one ever can feel quite sure it is sincere. I will answer all your letters if you will promise not to tell Bert we are corresponding. Not that I am ashamed of it by any means, but he is inclined to tease me, and I love him so dearly I can't bear to have him do so. The little girl you sent the candy to was both astonished and grateful. I did not tell her who sent it, for the fact would have been all over town in a week if I had, and I do not like to be gossiped about. I merely told her a good fairy had sent it, which was better."

Once a week thereafter Alice received a long letter from Frank and as regularly answered it.

"Frank is getting along nicely," Albert wrote Alice in the early spring. "I believe he has the making of a capable lawyer in him. He grinds away harder than I ever did when reading law and has never yet complained of how dry and dull it all is. He is a big, warm hearted fellow, too, and I am growing more fond of him every day. He is more devoted to me than a brother, and we have made a lot of plans for a month's outing on the Gypsy this coming summer. I like his family very much, and Mrs. Nason and both her daughters have invited me to bring you down when your school closes to make them a visit. I think I shall run up in June and stay over Sunday and bring Frank with me. I imagine he would like to come, for once in awhile I overhear him humming 'Ben Bolt.'"

"A very nicely worded little plot, but don't you imagine, my dear Bert, I do not see through it!" was the mental comment of Alice when she read the letter. "The young gentleman has bravely set to work to become a man instead of a cipher. My brother likes him; he whistles 'Ben Bolt;' my brother is to bring him up here again; I am expected to fall in love with Mr. Cipher that was and help him spend his money, and I am to be barely tolerated by mamma and both sisters! A most charming plot, surely, but it takes two to make a bargain. I think I know just the sort of people mamma and sisters are. He told me she read him a lecture every time he danced twice with a poor girl, and now I am expected to walk into the same trap and cringe to her ladyship for the sin of being poor. I guess not! I'll teach school till I die first, and he can think of me as having a 'slab of granite so gray' to keep me in place."

"Cure-Alls" Didn't Cure

Only a Kidney Specific of the genuine merit of South American Kidney Cure can ever hope to cope with insidious kidney diseases in all its forms.

"For two years I was greatly troubled with an affection of the kidneys—frequently unfitting me for work. I tried many patent medicines and "cure-alls," without getting any relief, for I had intense pain almost constantly. South American Kidney Cure was recommended to me. A few hours after commencing its use I got great relief. Four bottles cured. It is worth its weight in gold."—Frank S. Emerick, Alvinston, Ont. 38

Sold by D. M. Waters and J. S. McKeown.

But this diplomatic "Sweet Alice" wrote to her brother: "I am delighted that you are coming up, for I am so lonesome, and the weeks drag so hard! Bring your friend up, by all means, and I'll sing 'Ben Bolt' till he hates the name of Sweet Alice. The country will be looking fine then, and he can go over to the cemetery and select the corner I am to occupy. Pardon the joke, and don't tell him I uttered it."

To Frank she wrote: "Be sure to come up with Bert. I will sing all the old songs and the new ones you have sent me as well. If you come up on a Thursday you may visit my school [illegible] afternoon, and then you can see the girl you sent the candy to. She wears a calico pinafore and comes to school barefooted."

Alice's tactful reply to her brother's letter, coupled with his own sincere affection for her, brought her a response by return mail in the form of a check for $100, with explicit orders to spend every cent of it before he came.

CHAPTER XVII.

SANDGATE was just budding forth in a new suit of green, the meadows dotted with daisies, and here and there a bunch of tiger lilies waved in the breeze when one Friday afternoon the teacher at the north district school heard a knock.

The class in reading, then in evidence, were halted in their singsong of concert utterance, and Alice Page opened the door to find two stalwart young men standing there. With a quick impulse of propriety she stepped out and closed the door behind her, only to find herself clasped in a big brother's arms and to receive a smack that was heard by every pupil in the little schoolroom. With a very red face she freed herself and then presented a small hand to the other young man with the remark:

"I think you are both just as mean as you can be to surprise me in this way!"

When explanations were duly made, the two visitors were invited inside and given seats. The class in reading was then dismissed and that in spelling called to what was now seemingly to them an unexpected misery. A bombshell or a ghost at the window would not have produced any more consternation than those two strange visitors. This class, that one by one filed up in front of the teacher's desk and ranged themselves in line, stood trembling, and the boy at the head, to whom was put the first word, was unable to utter a sound. The next one spelled it wrong, and it was tried by two others and finally spelled right by a girl who could hardly do better than whisper it. She was told to go to the head, and after that the rest did better. The search for knowledge in that school had received a setback, however, for that day, and Alice decided to do the wisest thing and dismiss her band of pupils without delay. When the room was cleared of them she turned to her two callers and said with mock seriousness, "The first class in deportment will now define propriety."

"Propriety is—is— Propriety," replied her brother, "consists in two young men surprising one small and very saucy schoolma'am and letting a lot of imprisoned boys and girls escape to the woods and enjoy an extra hour of freedom."

"Not right," said Alice severely. "The next pupil will now answer."

"Propriety," answered Frank, "consists in two young men escaping from the city and relieving one tired schoolteacher from her duty and permitting her to go and gather flowers if she will. But which was the girl you told the fairy tale to, Miss Page?" he added as Alice began putting her books away.

"The only one in the spelling class you two bold, bad men didn't scare half out of her wits," she answered.

Frank walked about the room, peering curiously at its rather primitive fittings.

"So this is what you call a temple of learning," he remarked as he surveyed the barnlike room. "It is a curiosity to me, and the first time I was ever in an old time country schoolhouse. I should like to peep through one of the knotholes some day and watch the performances and hear a scared boy speak a piece."

"You had better not try it," answered Alice, "unless you want two or three farmers to swoop down on you armed with scythes and demanding to know what you are doing there."

When she had locked the schoolhouse door they got into the carriage the two young men had come in and left the forlorn little temple to the solitude of the trees and bushes that almost hid it from sight.

"I will stop in the village," said Albert as they drove away, "and leave you two to go home or take a ride, as suits you best; only, mind, be home by tea time, for I shall be hungry."

There is no time when a drive along wooded country roads is more charming than when the trees are fast growing green and the meadows spangled with daisies and buttercups.

"Let's go around by the mill pond," said Alice after leaving her brother in the village. "The road to it follows the brook up a mile. We may find a few lilies in the pond."

The brook beside which they were soon walking the horse was a charming bit of scenery as it came leaping over mossy ledges, laughing, chattering and filling the pools with foam flecks, and the old mill, with its great wheel dripping and clattering, and the mill itself proved even a greater curiosity to Frank than the schoolhouse. He hitched the horse, and, helping his fair companion to alight, the two went inside the mill and watched the rumbling wheels. Alice introduced her escort to the miller, and after they had been shown the mysteries of grinding he invited them out to the pond, and after bailing the old leaky boat so it was

TOPICS . . . BRIEFLETS & SHORT SUMMER STORIES.

The British Columbia Colonist says: "The nature of Lord Dundonald's crime is euphemistically described in the Liberal press as "a conflict with authority." The Government at Ottawa is the Authority. The Authority made it so disagreeable for Dundonald, so disagreeable and humiliating, in fact, that he was provoked to a conflict with the Authority. Conflict with the Authority is unconstitutional and a breach of military discipline. Ergo, the Authority was right and Dundonald was wrong. So the Authority fired him. Thus we see how, with a wise and enlightened Authority at Ottawa, new principles of jurisprudence are being evolved even at this late date in the world's history."

The Weekly Sun says: The Dominion Government has no such excess ($16,500,000) of revenue over expenditure. At the most its surplus for the year does not exceed $7,500,000. Taking the whole period that the present Government has been in power, the excess of receipts over expenditures is not more than a million dollars, and even this has been created, not out of ordinary revenues, but from the sale of assets in the form of public lands.

WOULD IT WORK HERE?

(Tweed News.)

A "black list" is being prepared by Deseronto merchants, and those from whom it is hard work to get money for goods delivered will have a rocky row to hoe in the future.

The Canadian Churchman says: "It is to be regretted that the Prime Minister should have even seemed to have spoken of a distinguished citizen of the Empire as a foreigner, and no amount of explanation can altogether remove the impression that he regards those who are not Canadian somewhat in that light." It is to be regretted that a paper purporting to be religious should be uncharitable and ungentlemanly enough to make use of language that would disgrace a party organ.—Globe, June 28th.

The moral obliquity of the Globe is so dense that it cannot distinguish between truth and falsehood when it effects the Grit party. The Canadian Churchman is correct and no amount of sophistry or special argument can change the fact. The Globe is fast sinking below the depth of the lowest "party organ."

"A BIG SHOW"
Will be held in Mr. J. W. Johnson's barn, Victoria Ave., Monday, July 4th, at 2.15 p.m.
Refreshments Free.
Admission, Adults, 3 cents.
Children, 2 cents.
Reserved Seats, 5 cents."

Now, folks, don't fail to attend this great attraction. It's not as big as a circus, but it's better than a circus, and well worth double the price of admission.

CHARGED WITH PERJURY.

PHILLIP O. LOTT, IT IS ALLEGED DID NOT TELL THE TRUTH.

A few days ago an Assyrian pedlar was charged before the Magistrate with pedling with two horses throughout the country, whereas his license was for but one animal. He was discharged. At the trial Phillip O. Lott, of Rawdon, who was a special constable, gave testimony against Greenburg. It is alleged that Lott did not tell the truth and as a result he was this morning charged before the Magistrate with perjury. He elected to be tried before His Worship. Case in progress this afternoon. Mr. Anderson appeared for the Crown, Mr. McMahon for the private prosecutor and Mr. J. Williams for the accused.

EXPELLING FRENCH MONKS.

Troops, Police and Firemen Were Used But Latter Did Work.

Nantes, July 2.—The extensive establishment of the Premonstrant and Capuchin orders were closed yesterday after violent resistence. The Premonstrant monks barricaded their doors and windows.

A battalion of infantry and a detachment of dragoons assisted the police.

Firemen finally deluged the monastery with water, forcing back the monks from the barricades.

The occupants were taken out by means of ladders.

Similar expedients were used to expel the Capuchin monks.

To Suppress Appropriation.

Paris, July 2.—The Budget Committee of the Chamber of Deputies voted yesterday for the suppression of the appropriation of the French Embassy at the Vatican, and also passed a resolution which will be incorporated in the committee's report to the Chamber, censuring Premier Combes for his refusal to express the views of the Government on the subject.

BEGAN WORK AT DETROIT.

The Ontario Railway Commission Meets Michigan Experts.

Detroit, July 2.—The Canadian commission to investigate the American railway taxation system occupied the Russell House parlor yesterday, where it met the Michigan State Commission and discussed informally the laws and methods of this State.

The session in this city will conclude July 6, when the commission will go to Lansing to inspect the books of the State.

All the members of the Michigan State Tax Commission were present and entered heartily into the discussion.

Northwest's Wheat Area.

Regina, N.W.T., July 2.—The Department of Agriculture has just issued an estimate of the area of the Northwest Territories under crop this season, 1904. From the figures given it appears that there are 1,054,211 acres under wheat, 651,619 acres under oats, 111,979 acres under barley and 20,938 acres under flax. A comparative table is also appended, showing the acreage under these crops for each year since 1898. Wheat, oats and barley all show large increases in area over 1903, but flax from 32,431 acres in that year has fallen to 20,938 acres for 1904.

Strike That May Grow.

St. Catharines, July 2.—Thursday at the Welland Vale Saw Works the smithers quit work because an extra apprentice was put on. The strikers are men who earn from $4 to $6 a day. They have approached the other workmen of the works, over 300 in all; with a view of having them go out in sympathy, provided the objectionable apprentice is not taken off.

CROWDS WILL BE THERE.

Great crowds are expected at the store opposite John Fenn's cigar store in Belleville on Monday and Tuesday, July 4th and 5th, when Col. Collins Young, the smallest man in the world, will be on view in connection with a display of a few of the premiums given to consumers of "Boss" plug chewing tobacco and other plug tobaccos manufactured by the Empire Tobacco Co., all of which bear the Snowshoe tag.

Literary Notes.

Mr. P. T. McGrath, writing in the Review of Reviews for July, outlines Canada's recent remarkable commercial and industrial expansion, as shown especially in great projects for railroad-building.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more prone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILROAD

TRUSTEES FOR BONDHOLDERS RESIGN AND NEW TRUSTEES APPOINTED.

The Court of Appeal gave judgment on Wednesday upholding the contention of some of the bondholders of the Central Ontario Railway that the court has power to direct the sale of a railway to satisfy their claims. The Toronto General Trusts Corporation has been trustee for the bondholders, and the action for sale which was taken in the name of the corporation, beginning nearly two years ago, has been vigorously resisted by Mr. S. J. Ritchie, of Akron, Ohio, a bondholder and the chief stockholder. Now that the Court of Appeal has decided the validity of the proceedings it is probable that the sale will be completed. Yesterday, however, application was made by the Trusts Corporation to be relieved of the trusteeship, and for the appointment of a new trustee. Mr. Justice Anglin granted the application. Messrs. S. J. Ritchie, T. G. Blackstock and R. Weddell being appointed to represent the other bondholders.

MEETS AGAIN MONDAY.

House of Commons Held a Listless Session on Thursday.

Ottawa, July 2.—A small and listless House perfunctorily disposed of various estimates of the Department of the Interior Thursday afternoon and adjourned at 5 o'clock. The House will meet again on Monday at 3 p. m., the Prime Minister having delayed the beginning of the morning sittings till Tuesday. The best prophets are figuring on prorogation in three weeks.

Hon. Sydney Fisher denied that he hired out one of his horses to an Ottawa trooper and received the full Government allowance for the same. He said he kept a horse at a livery stable in Ottawa. To provide exercise for the horse the liveryman, in Mr. Fisher's absence, lent the animal to a trooper in the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards. Mr. Fisher accepted no pay for the horse.

The bill respecting the Temigami Railway Company, as amended by the Senate, was accepted by the House. Under the Senate amendment, Father Paradis is retained as a charter director.

Mr. Fitzpatrick introduced a bill relating to the naturalization of aliens. The amendment is designed to remove some technical difficulties which have arisen in the Province of Quebec in regard to the places of sitting of the Circuit Court.

Replying to Dr. Kendall, Sir Richard Cartwright stated that $1,721,566 had been paid in bounties to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company since it began the manufacture of iron and steel.

Sir William Mulock was not prepared to answer Dr. Kendall's enquiry as to whether the fair wage resolution passed by the Canadian Parliament in 1900 applies to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company.

PRINCIPAL GRAHAM'S SUICIDE.

Throws Himself Under a Train and Is Ground to Pieces.

London, Ont., July 2.—Principal Robert M. Graham of the Simcoe Street Normal Training School, took his own life in a horrible manner at St. Mary's Junction yesterday afternoon. He was being taken to the Sanitarium at Guelph for treatment, and the party with him, who included his physician, Dr. Teasdall, and Mrs. Graham, had alighted at the Junction to take the eastbound express. As the train reached the platform Graham suddenly stepped behind his wife and leaped in front of the locomotive, being ground to pieces under the wheels. There were numerous witnesses of the horrible occurrence. The deceased had been suffering from melancholia for several months, which became acute upon his being told that he was afflicted with a serious physical malady. He was regarded as one of the brightest minds in the teaching profession in the west, and in addition was a barrister-at-law. He was 47 years of age, and had spent practically the whole of his life here. He was born in Kincardine. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was highly respected by all.

Killed Going to Picnic.

Ottawa, July 2.—W. C. Baker, 10 years old, was killed by a Canada Atlantic train yesterday. With his brother and other members of the family he was going to a picnic, and failed to notice a train shunting at South Indian station.

A Beet Sugar Combine.

Detroit, July 2.—One of the most important steps in the development of the sugar beet industry in Michigan is the formation of a central board of control to more economically operate plants practically owned by the same interests. The plants now working under agreement are: The Alma Sugar Co., capital $650,000; Saginaw Co., $750,000; Valley Co., $650,000; Bay City Co., $1,000,000; Tawas Co., $750,000; Sebewaing Co., $650,000; Sanilac Co., $800,000; Peninsular Co., $1,000,000; total capitalization, $6,250,000.

Leamington, July 2.—George W. Benson of Windsor has been engaged in putting down an oil well, and was within three hours of finishing when a strong wind blew the gas from the well to the engine-room. In a second the well was on fire. It burned out, causing a loss of over $2,000.

FOR

Good Workmanship.
Reasonable Prices.
Promptness and the use of Best Materials.

Nothing

Of the CHEAP material nature finds its way into our paint.

We use nothing but pure white lead and pure Raydon oil. It would not pay us to adulterate with fish oil, coal oil or benzine—as is sometimes done to quote cut price.

Our reputation comes first and at any cost it must abide.

While Speaking of Cost.

Consider this.

That we buy our lead and oils in huge quantities for our own use. Come to our warehouse and see for yourself the ton upon ton of lead.

Visit our vaults and see our Oils purchased in carload lots to get the price at its lowest.

The same regarding our dry and wet colors, and painters' materials, the quantity wholesale buying gives us the greatest of advantage in selling—and in executing your work.

Gives you the advantage of having your work done with the best of materials and at low prices.

What we say of paint we can also say of Wallhangings.

No buyer of Wallhangings in Canada can lay down Wall Papers at lower prices than we do. Few can purchase at as low prices. As we have the best American and Canadian agencies.

The Sign "ss."

The letters "ss." are to be found at the beginning of acknowledgments and other legal documents, but not one in a dozen can tell you what that cabalistic "ss." is for. The abbreviation is a contraction of the Latin word "scilicet," which is also a contraction, having originally been written as "scire licate," neither of which, you will note, has more than one "s." The word entire or in its abbreviated state is equivalent to the old English "to wit," still widely used, the design of both being simply to call particular attention to what follows.

A Great Temple.

The most magnificent work of architecture is the Taj Mahal in Agra, Hindustan. It was erected by Shah Jehan to the memory of his favorite queen. It is octagonal in form, of pure white marble, inlaid with jasper, carnelian, turquoise, agate, amethysts and sapphires. The work took 22,000 men twenty years to complete, and though there were free gifts and the labor was free the cost is estimated at $16,000,000.

No Interruptions Likely.

Tired Housekeeper—There! The house is as neat as a new pin at last. I am going to take a nap. Try not to disturb me with your play, my pets. Little Brother—What shall I do if any one calls? Little Sister—No need to bother about that. No one ever calls when things are clean.

THE CURE'S DINNER.

It Marked a New Era in the Life of an Appreciative Marquise.

How few there are like the charming lady in one of Brillat-Savarin's anecdotes! How few there are who know what a good dinner is! But she did, although she had been brought up in an artificial school. She had called on a simple cure to offer alms for his poor, and she did not know that cures dine in the middle of the day. Dinner had just been announced, and the cure asked her to dine with him. She consented. It was a new era in her life. After that culinary complications became vulgar in her eyes, pate de foie gras and cream laden sauces disgusted her, and even Nesselrode pudding, unless made by an artist, made her unhappy. As for liqueurs, she learned to regard a liking for them as a symptom of advancing age.

It was a fast day, and this made perfection all the more difficult to attain on the part of the cure's old servant, Juliette. The tablecloth glistened, the porcelain was exquisitely white, and the plates were kept hot over boiling water. The soup was bisque of crabs, followed by a salmon trout, with a sauce admirably proportioned, and then came an omelet of fish roe, so round, so odorous, so redolent of parsley and chives, that for a moment all conversation stopped. A salad, on the leaves of which light, dewlike drops quivered, preceded the dessert of three luscious pears, a cheese resembling Camembert and a pot of conserves. The cure did not say grace until he and his guest had sipped from fragile, but not costly, cups the limpid and hot Mocha. "No liqueurs," the cure said. "For my friends, yes. But no strong drinks for me. They are the resources of age."

It is recorded that the lady was affected almost to tears by this combination of simplicity and elegance. It was a revelation, and to this appreciative marquise the introduction of the famous omelet au thon, the secret of which was almost lost in the revolution, into Parisian society is due.—Maurice F. Egan in Smart Set.

USES FOR LEMONS.

Two or three slices of lemon in a cup of strong tea will cure a nervous headache.

Lemon juice (outward application) will allay the irritation caused by the bites of insects.

A teaspoonful of lemon juice in a small cup of black coffee will relieve bilious headache.

A dash of lemon in plain water is an excellent tooth wash. It not only removes tartar, but sweetens the breath.

Lemon juice is better than any drug or complexion powder for giving permanent clearness and beauty to the skin.

The juice of a lemon taken in hot water on awakening in the morning is an excellent liver corrective and for stout women is better than any anti-fat medicine ever invented.

Dangerous Admissions.

It is dangerous to make a confession unless one really means it, and we may add that it is sometimes dangerous to take a confession as honestly meant. A husband and wife between whom a little unpleasant passage had occurred had made the matter up, and the wife said, as if to clear her conscience:

"Oh, well, I suppose that I have my faults."

"Yes, my dear," said the husband.

"What?"

"I simply said 'Yes.'"

"That I have my faults!" exclaimed the wife indignantly. "What are they. I should like to know?"

"Well, to begin with"—

"No; I don't want to hear."—London Tit-Bits.

Indifference.

An old, old woman sat on the curb of Park row. Her clothing was rags. Her bleared eyes were deep in a setting of wrinkles. Upon her scant gray hair there was something that once had been a hat. She trembled with weakness. Beside her was a basket filled with trumpery, evidently a stock in trade. Passing her were scores of well clad men and women. Few noticed the wretched wreck. Her feet, shoeless, but wrapped in strips of carpeting, had been bruised on the stones of the street, and she was adjusting the covering.

"Terrible!" said a lady to her escort.

"Yes," he replied. "Where 'll we go for lunch?"

An Artist's Errors.

Occasionally Vereschagin in his efforts after realism made some strange mistakes. There is, for instance, a picture of his representing the execution of rebels during the Indian mutiny which is very powerful. Unfortunately, however, the artist had not apparently known of the change in British military costume, and in consequence the British soldiers in the picture are represented as wearing the helmets which did not come into use in our army for more than a quarter of a century after the mutiny.—London Globe.

Her Mamma's Error.

Mrs. Cutter—Charles, what are those large red, white and blue ivory lozenges I saw in your pocket last night? Mr. Cutter—Oh, those—those are trading stamps, dear. Mrs. Cutter—There, that's just what I thought they were, but mamma declared they had something to do with some kind of a game.

The Fruits.

Mrs. Hatterson—I wonder if it has paid to give our daughter such a good education. Hatterson—Paid! Why, of course. Don't you see from her manner how superior she is to us?—Life.

Circus Attracts Crowds.

FOREPAUGH & SELLS BROTHERS SHOW WAS CENTRE OF ATTRACTION.

Forepaugh & Sells Brothers circus reached the city early Friday morning, held the usual street parade, and in the afternoon and evening gave performances in their big tents on the circus grounds.

The street parade attracted the usual large crowds and the streets along the rout were lined with spectators. The procession was a particularly long one and in point of the number of bands, horsemen and women and decorated chariots and vans seemed to be larger and more elaborate than Ringling Brothers' show seen here.

The herd of elephants was a large one and some of the animals of exceptional size. There was also a fine display of camels and dromedaries. A pleasing feature of the parade was the splendid condition of all the animals and the chariots.

The ring acts of the performance are among the very best ever witnessed. The horse fair, introducing some remarkable high school equestrian acts, was followed with the closest interest, the exact time so closely observed by the elegant steeds being much admired, while the perfect riding of Messrs. Root. Stickney and Anita Eber, Messrs. Wm. Gorman and Harry Lamkin, the Misses Mamie Klein and Adla Lovenburg, as well as Mr. Thompson and Miss Milton, and the splendid horsemanship of Miss Maude Hayward driving a park cart, was one to attract the attention of all lovers of horseflesh. The performance of Mons. Huberi, who leaps to the back of a running horse with a sulky in his hands; the funny Raymond Thompson and his bareback hurdle act with the mule, were also worthy of attention and praise.

The excellent work of Miss Oulkamerrs, the petite and graceful principal bareback equestrienne in ring No. 1, was much admired and applauded.

Miss Stickney's hurricane hurdle act, especially her ride through the fiery rings, was daring and thrilling enough to satisfy the most exacting.

The Lecusson family, with their Parisian brake, introduced a novel and highly sensational act. With the four horses going full speed, the men and women, all fully dressed, did all kinds of flying somersaults on the backs of the horses and back into the brake, and out to the centre of the track, sometimes alone and sometimes one carrying another on his or her shoulders. They wound up by four of the party leaping to the back of a horse galloping about the ring.

The king pin of the ring performances was, however, Oscar Lowande's somersault backwards from the back of the horse he was riding to another steed following close behind.

DEATH OF MRS. JAS. GILLICK

DECEASED HAD BEEN A SUFFERER SOME MONTHS.

Mrs. James Gillick, who has been ill for some time with lung trouble, passed away last evening at the family residence, Harriet street. Deceased, who was 23 years of age, was a Miss Huffman and had lived here the greater portion of her life. She was known to many in the city, and her demise, although anticipated, caused many expressions of regret. Mrs. Gillick was a member of St. Michael's Church. In addition to the bereaved husband three young children are called upon to mourn the loss of a loving mother. To the sorrowing one will be extended the sympathy of many friends.

Oils, Plasters and Operations Fail to Cure Cancer

There is a peculiar condition of the blood which favors the growth of cancer germs in the system, and that is the reason that local treatment like the above fails to make permanent cures.

Those who suffer from cancers or tumors will be glad to learn of a Constitutional remedy that is pleasant to use and can be taken in the privacy of one's own home without even the members of your own family knowing it. Mention this paper and send 6 cents in stamps to B. I. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., for a useful booklet, "Cancer, its Cause and Cure."

OBITUARY.

GILLEN.

Mr. P. J. Gillen, a native of Madoc township, died at his home in Erinsville on Sunday, June 21. He was about 23 years of age and is survived by his widow and two little children. The remains were interred in the cemetery at Madoc. Two brothers, Dennis, of Madoc, and Alexander, of Tweed, and two sisters, Mrs. Bronson, of Stirling, and Mrs. Teeney, of this city, survive.

Dr. Giuseppe Lapponi.

PHYSICIAN TO THE POPE PRAISES DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

In Four Cases of Anaemia Their Effects Were So Satisfactory That He Will go on Using Them.

Dr. Lapponi, whose skill preserved the life of the late Pope Leo XIII to the great age of 92, and to whose care the health of the present Pope, His Holiness Pius X., is confided, has written the remarkable letter of which the following is a translation:—

"I certify that I have tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in four cases of the simple anaemia of development. After a few weeks of treatment, the result came fully up to my expectations. For that reason I shall not fail in the future to extend the use of this laudable preparation, not only in the treatment of other morbid forms of the category of anaemia or chlorosis, but also in cases of neurasthenia and the like."

DR. GIUSEPPE LAPPONI

Dr. Giuseppe Lapponi, Physician to the Pope, who has written a letter in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of this opinion. Dr. Lapponi's high official position places his professional competence above question, and it is certain that he did not write as above without weighing his words, or without a full sense of the effect his opinion would have.

The "simple anaemia of development" referred to by Dr. Lapponi is of course that tired, languid condition of young girls whose development to womanhood is tardy, and whose health, at the period of that development, is so often imperilled. A girl, bright and merry enough in childhood, will in her teens grow by degrees pale and languid. Frequent headaches and a sense of uneasiness which she cannot understand, make her miserable. Just when it is time for her to leave off being a girl and become a woman—a change which comes to different individuals at different ages — her development lingers—why? Because she has too little blood. That is what Dr. Lapponi means when he speaks in the scientific language natural to him, of "the anaemia of development." Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have the power of making new blood. They cure anaemia just as food cures hunger. That is how they help growing girls, who, for want of this new blood, often drift into chronic ill-health, or "go into a decline" — which means consumption — and die. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills could save them.

The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a nerve tonic referred to by Dr. Lapponi, makes them valuable to men as well as women. They act on the nerves through the blood and thus cure diseases like St. Vitus' dance, neuralgia, paralysis and locomotor ataxia. When buying these pills it is important to see that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around each box. Never take a substitute, as it is worse than a waste of money—it is a menace to health. If you cannot get the genuine pills from your dealer write the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be sent you post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Municipal Advertising.

The City of New York now employs an advertising expert. In an interview the Commissioner of Accounts said the municipal advertising is a vast affair and goes into many different mediums. "We use dailies, weeklies, financial journals and other periodicals, always the principal mediums in each field." He said he was sure the best results were from the daily newspapers, "just as in the case of a business house."

A MAN HATES HIMSELF

When he wakes up with headache and bad taste in the mouth. Something is needed to settle the stomach, clear away the dull, heavy, feeling and create a little appetite. ACCIDENT AT MUNDIC MINE

AN EMPLOYEE FELL FIFTY FEET DOWN THE SHAFT — WAS CAUGHT IN A BUCKET, BUT SUSTAINED SERIOUS INJURIES.

(Tweed News.)

Mr. Abram Smith, of Holloway, an employee at the Mundic Mine, two miles east of Begart, met with a serious accident on Thursday evening last. He was descending into the shaft by means of a ladder and when about one hundred feet from the bottom accidentally fell. He was fortunately caught in a bucket after falling about fifty feet. He was immediately brought to the surface by the other employees, and it was found that he had sustained a fracture of the left thigh, a bad scalp wound on the back of the head and a cut on the chin. The fracture was set and the wounds dressed and the injured man was taken to the home of his brother at Madoc next day.

Y.M.C.A. Camp.

This warm weather brings very forcibly to our minds that camping season is near at hand. The natural question that comes to every boy, after examinations are o'er and studies are laid aside is "where will I spend my vacation in order that I might have the most fun?" No boy can spend his holidays more profitably and enjoy himself better than by attending the Y.M.C.A. camp. It is an ideal spot, and easy of access to Belleville. This is pronounced by travellers one of the most beautiful in Canada. Camp Quinte, as it is called, is situated opposite the famous high shore on the Picton Reach, six miles from Deseronto. It opens Tuesday, July 19th. The party leaves by steamer Varuna at 8.30, reaching camp at dinner time. The outing lasts two weeks, closing Tuesday, August 2nd, in time to allow all to reach home at 4.30 p.m. The day following, August 3rd, the Senior Camp opens. It also continues for two weeks, breaking up on the 17th. Booklets describing camp can be procured at the Association rooms, or by writing H. O. McGuire, Assistant Leader. Send in your application early, as accommodation may be at a premium when camp opens.—Com.

CURES COLDS IN ONE HOUR

Many cold cures are dangerous because composed of deadening opiates. But fragrant healing Catarrhozone cures colds in one hour and is both harmless and delightful to use. Even the worst colds, sneezing, sniffeling colds with running eyes are stopped very quickly when the balsamic vapor of Catarrhozone is inhaled. Catarrhozone acts like a charm on colds, kills them outright, prevents their return a few hours later. For colds, catarrh and throat trouble use only Catarrhozone. Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c. at all druggists.

The Web Spinning Ant.

One of the most interesting observations made in ant life, says Andrew Wilson, the scientist, was that which showed that a certain red ant has evolved the habit of web spinning. The ways of this species were noted in the botanic gardens at Peradeniya, Ceylon, by E. G. Green. The extraordinary part of the story is that these ants used larvae as their spinning machines, the larvae employing their silk threads, used to make the cocoons, as their sewing machines. Mr. Green took some leaves which had been sewed together by the ants and unfastened the stitches. The separated edges were drawn together by the ants, and then, an hour afterward, the larvae or grubs, held in the mouths of the ants, were seen to be passed backward and forward across the gaps made in the leaves. The movements of the grubs were duly directed by the ants, and the silk threads spun by the mouths of the larvae soon repaired the defects in the leaves.

William Redmond's Answer.

William Redmond, M. P., once arose to speak in the house of commons, according to the Boston Record, and there came a question, hurled at him from the Right side of the house:

"Will you vote for this bill if it comes up?"

Mr. Redmond looked from one side of the house to the other and slowly answered:

"I will"—

Immediately the right side of the house burst into a storm of applause. But Mr. Redmond continued, as soon as he could be heard:

—"not"—

Then the storm came from the left side, and as soon as it subsided for a moment he completed what he started:

—"answer that question."

And perfect silence reigned on both sides.

It's because your nerves are in a weak, irritable condition. Ferrozone will make them strong and correct the trouble causing your insomnia. "I fell into a state of nervous exhaustion last fall," writes Mrs. J. Stroud, of Dexter. "I was run down, couldn't sleep and felt perfectly miserable—tried Ferrozone and was quickly benefitted. I can recommend Ferrozone to anyone suffering from over-wrought nerves and sleeplessness." No tonic is better, try Ferrozone. Price 50c at druggists.

Jeffrey's Tattered Books.

The famous reviewer Jeffrey treated with disdain the bookbinder's delicate art. Books were merely meant to be read, he contended, and he was quite satisfied so long as the words were visible. Lord Cockburn laments the fact that Jeffrey's library was, "for a lover of books and for one who had picked up a few, most wretched and so ill cared for that the want even of a few volumes never disturbed him."

Carlyle in his "Reminiscences" describes the study of his brilliant countryman as "a roomy, not overneat apartment on the ground floor, with a big baize covered table loaded with book rows and paper bundles. On one or perhaps two of the tables were bookshelves, likewise well filled, but with books in tattery, ill bound or unbound condition."

SUTHERLAND SISTERS HAIR GROWER

and will quickly eradicate all trace of scalp bacteria, which is the cause of hair falling, dandruff and baldness. NO SCALP CAN BE HEALTHY AND NO HAIR CAN BE BEAUTIFUL WHEN CONTAMINATED WITH THESE DISEASE-BREEDING CREATURES. They undermine the hair and devour all the nutriment or life-sap of the scalp, without which the scalp dries up and peels off, forming dandruff and causing the loss of hair. SEVEN SUTHERLAND SISTERS HAIR GROWER AND SCALP CLEANER ARE THE ONLY REMEDIES IN THE WORLD THAT WILL DESTROY THESE GERMS. They penetrate the scalp thoroughly, carrying with them all the necessary properties to quickly regenerate all the impoverished parts. They rebuild the lost tissues of the scalp and renew the growth of the hair in every case. A few applications will make the hair fairly sparkle with new life and vigor. They make healthy hair grow twice to three times as fast as it does normally.

McINTOSH BROS.

THE BOER SECRET ARMY

Claim Made That It Is Ready to Take the Field.

4,000 Men, Well Equipped and Fully Provisioned, in Mountains on Border of German Southwest Africa—Led By Men Who Have Never Surrendered Their Arms to the British—Germans Giving Aid.

York, Pa., July 2.—A Boer uprising in South Africa is predicted in a letter written by a Boer in German Southwest Africa, to Girardus H. Van Deventer, who was a lieutenant in the Boer army and who is now earning a livelihood by teaching languages in the city.

Van Deventer was in receipt of the letter yesterday and he was surprised to learn that a Boer army of 4,000 men well armed, fully provisioned and with good horses, are in the field on the borders of German Southwest Africa. These troops are in command of Generals Van Zyl, Van Brummelen and Moritz, who have never surrendered their arms to the British.

After the close of the war these went into the mountains on the borders of German Southwest Africa, where they remained with a few followers. During the past year their handful of men has grown, it is claimed, to an army of 4,000 and is still increasing. It is expected that there will be 10,000 men in the field before next January, as Boers who are dissatisfied with the situation under the British Government are coming into the border camp daily.

Germans Giving Aid.

The writer of the letter says in part: "We are well fortified in the mountains and have enough provisions to last us a year, also an abundant supply of ammunition and arms. These stores we have been accumulating gradually. There are enough arms in the camp to equip 8,000 men and we expect to be supplied with more. The Germans are very friendly to us. Our rendezvous is an ideal spot both for living and in point of the protection it affords us. The time is not far distant when the spark of rebellion will be fanned into a vast flame which will sweep South Africa. Rest assured, the Boers will never rest until the British are driven out and our country reclaimed."

Fear Publicity.

The letter states further that the existence of the Boer army has not been given publicity and that the leaders and the men have been guarded in their conduct so that none of their exploits would be recounted in newspapers. The leaders now consider that the force has become sufficiently large to inspire Boers all over the world, so letters are being sent out to Boers all over Europe and throughout the United States urging them to be in readiness to respond when a call for recruits is issued.

They were seen passing the G.T.R. station here a short time before the message came and made their escape on a freight train going west.

Nostrums and Cure Alls.

Toronto, July 2.—The Ontario Medical Council sat yesterday, both morning and afternoon, and will conclude this morning. The most interesting feature of the afternoon's sitting was the report of the committee on patent medicines. It was recommended that the Dominion Government be memoralized in a petition setting forth the necessity of a law requiring that the formulae of all patent medicines be printed on the bottles containing them, and asking when such medicines were advertised to cure certain ailments which the formulae would not warrant, that such representations be made an indictible offence. The report declared that the majority of patent medicines contained alcohol, that their continued use was detrimental to the public health, and that they induced habits of intemperance.

CELEBRATED IN LONDON

Brilliant Gathering Honors Canada's 37th Birthday.

Lord Strathcona Presided and Messages From Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Others From Home Were Loudly Cheered—Some of the Notables Who Were Present—Dominion Day Within the Dominion Very Generally Celebrated.

London, July 2.—(C. A. P.)—The dinner held in celebration of Dominion Day at the Hotel Cecil was a brilliant affair. The big chamber, one of the handsomest in Europe, blazed with light and resounded with cheers the whole evening. Lord Strathcona presided, and among the notables present were the Dukes of Argyle and Marlborough, Lord Brassey, Lord Kelvin, Sir Charles Tupper, Hon. Premier G. H. Murray of Nova Scotia, Sir Henri Taschereau, Attorney-General of Manitoba, Sir Harry Allan, Hon. Mr. Freeman, the Archdeacon of London, Rev. Dr. Milligan, Rev. Dr. Warden, Rev. M. Scrimger, Dr. Herridge, Prof. Osborne (Winnipeg), Geo. Anderson, Dr. Russell, Messrs. Yule and Wigmore, members of the Canadian bowlers, A. Baker, Sir T. Barlow, J. E. Colmer, Wal. Griffith, Capt. Eaton, Justices Grantham and Forbes, Rev. Alfred Gandier, C. Hanson, Canadian Agent General Howard, General Laurie, A. Lang, D. McMaster, C. F. Just, Hon. Mr. Lemieux, J. K. Macdonald, Sir A. Mackenzie, Rev. J. Mackay (Montreal), E. H. Newcomb, Sir Gilbert Parker, Parkin T. Skinner, Hon. J. W. Taverner, Hon. Mr. Turner, T. W. Watkins, Sir Fred Young were present as guests.

Message From Laurier.

Lord Strathcona proposed a toast to the fourteen delegates who are attending the conference of the alliance of Reformed Churches at Liverpool. Lord Lyttelton should have replied to the toast of the Dominion, but was prevented by Parliamentary duties. Earl Aberdeen and the Archbishop of Canterbury were detained by the coronation debate. A hurricane of applause greeted a message from Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "Please convey to guests assembled to celebrate the 37th birthday of the Dominion greeting from your fellow-countrymen across the sea. Canadians heartily join with their fellow-subjects to testify to Canada's prosperous, happy and loyal state."

Cheering was renewed when messages were read from the Toronto Board of Trade and National Club, Toronto.

Dawson City cabled Sir Charles Tupper congratulations to the fathers of Confederation from Canada's golden north. Sir Henri Taschereau gracefully proposed the toast to the King.

THE DAY IN CANADA.

Marred By Rain But Still Generally Celebrated in Ontario.

While the weather yesterday was a decided disappointment to those who had relied on outdoor engagements for their pleasure, the day might have been much worse, the rainfall only amounting to .26 of an inch, and an hour in the afternoon.

One has to go back 13 years for a similar day. Then it rained in the morning, but ceased at 9.10 a.m., and there was a little more at noon, and again in the evening. In the previous year, 1890, an inch of rain fell as the result of a violent thunderstorm between 6.30 and 7 in the morning, with thunder at intervals during the day and a little rain in the evening.

There was bad weather all over the Province yesterday and it extended to the Maritime Provinces, though there were local patches of sunshine and fair skies. There was no rain at Parry Sound, and the fall was very slight in Northern Ontario. Kingston had none and Quebec was fair, but Ottawa had a thunderstorm. Beautiful weather prevailed in Manitoba and the Northwest.

Some of the Celebrations.

Ottawa had a review of 2,500 troops, and outdoor sports galore. Quebec contented itself with a salute of 21 guns from the King's bastion at noon. Renfrew had Lord Dundonald and a day of Scottish enthusiasm. An old-time calithumpian parade amused Petrolea and a monster trade procession was a satisfactory offset. Lord Aylmer reviewed the troops at Kingston after a ten mile march, and a camp fire gave rest and enjoyment at night. Woodbridge had sports, and Whitby welcomed over 4,000 of her old boys and girls in the beginning of a four days' celebration. Toronto indulged in a very fine open air horse parade.

Girls Save Drowning Boy.

Elder's Mills, July 2.—Thursday a son of Mr. Elder was crossing the apron of the dam on the Humber when he accidentally slipped and fell into about 16 feet of water. The current carried him out about 10 yards, but Miss Grace Ayer of Montreal, and Miss Annie McLean, daughter of Dr. P. D. McLean, Woodbridge, companions at Moulton College, Toronto, plunged into the water without disrobing in any way and swam out to the lad, when Miss McLean caught him by the hair of his head. Between the two girls they succeeded in swimming with him to shore and resuscitating him. The girls are receiving congratulations from everybody.

Asks $2,000 Damages.

Stratford, July 2.—Clement & Clement of Berlin, on behalf of Miss Augusta Lasso of that town, have filed with the clerk of the high court an action against William Stroh of Wellesley, until recently employed in the Kuntz brewery at Waterloo. The young lady claims damages to the extent of $2,000 for alleged breach of promise of marriage.

The Sunlight Maids are always through their wash at twelve o'clock.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

With ordinary soap a woman has to work so hard and so long on wash day she has no time for preparing any of the family meals. Wash day is a trial, and the good wife faces each with a sigh of despair.

Sunlight Soap makes all the difference in the world. No toiling—no rubbing—no boiling—less than half the labor with much better results. Most women are all through their wash by twelve o'clock when they wash with Sunlight Soap the Sunlight way. It makes child's play of work.

ASK FOR THE OCTAGON BAR.

Sunlight Soap washes the clothes white and won't injure the hands.

Travelers Massacred.

London, July 4.—In connection with the cablegram which American Secretary of State Hay received from Ispahan, Persia, July 2, signed by "Armenian Bishops in Persia," The Daily Chronicle this morning prints the following telegram dated Tauris, Persia, June 30:

"It is announced from a perfectly reliable source that in the vicinity of Van, a fortified city of Turkish Armenia, on June 24, Kurds and Turkish regulars attacked Armenian travelers, killing them as revolutionists: This is the beginning of a general massacre in the Province of Van. The people are in terror."

6,000 Slain.

New York, July 4.—Dr. John Arschagouni, president of the Armenian Union of America, said last night:

"Six thousand Armenians were very recently slain by Turkish brutality in the Province of Sassoun alone. At the town of Akhibi their bodies clogged the river. Twenty-nine villages were destroyed.

The Armenian Archbishop, Rev. Dr. Sarajian, of Worcester, Mass., sailed yesterday for Europe, having received a mysterious message to come at once."

EMIGRANTS TO THE NUMBER OF SEVEN HUNDRED DROWNED.

S. S. Norga Struck Hebrides Islet of Rockall.

Twenty-Seven Survivors Alone Left to Tell the Sad Tale of the Sea —There Was No Panic and the Officers Behaved Like Men When the Final Test of Manhood Came to Them — Ship Sank Quickly.

London, July 4.—It is reported that over 700 emigrants bound from Copenhagen for New York on the Scandinavian-American Line steamer Norge have been drowned.

Twenty-seven survivors were landed at Grimsby, 15 miles southeast of Hull last night.

The Norge struck on a rock last Tuesday in the North Sea and foundered. There was a heavy sea and most of the boats were smashed. Only two of the boats succeeded in getting away and these were picked up by Grimsby trawlers.

A Survivor's Story.

The steam trawler Salvia put into Grimsby late last night with the 27 rescued Scandinavians on board. Only one of them could speak English. He said:

"We left Copenhagen, June 22. There were 700 emigrants, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes and Finns, on board. The crew numbered about 80 men.

"All went well until June 28. I lay in my bunk waiting for breakfast. We heard a little bump and then another bump, and then I rushed on deck. Seeing that something had happened, I went below to gather up my belongings.

No Panic.

"Scores were rushing on deck and the hatchway was crowded with emigrants. They were launching boats and rushing into them, but there was no panic.

"There were four or five in the boat into which I got. Luckily, we had the only seaman who escaped, and he was able to navigate our boat.

"We saw two other boats capsize, owing to the heavy sea and because no one could navigate them.

Drowned By Dozens.

"We made straightaway, and when we last saw the Norge a large number of emigrants were on the deck. Captain Gundel stood on the bridge. Dozens of passengers had jumped into the sea. They wore life belts, but were drowned before our eyes.

"After 24 hours the Salvia bore down and picked us up.

"About 700 must have been drowned."

Story of the Disaster

When last seen the Norge was sinking where she struck on the Islet of Rockall, whose isolated peak rises itself from a deadly Atlantic reef some 290 miles off the west coast of Scotland.

Early in the morning of June 28, the Norge, which was out of her course in heavy weather, ran onto the Rockall reef, which in the distance looks like a ship, under full sail. The Norge was quickly backed off, but the heavy seas poured in the rent in the bows.

Six Boats Smashed.

The Norge quickly began to go down by the head. Eight boats were lowered and into these the women and children were hurriedly placed. Six of these boats smashed against the side of the Norge, and their helpless inmates were caught up by the heavy seas.

Two boat loads got safely away from the side of the sinking ship, and many of the emigrants who were left on board, seizing life belts, threw themselves into the sea and were drowned.

Capt. Gundel, so say the survivors, stood on the bridge of the doomed vessel until it could be seen no more.

Beat Off With Oars.

The Norge foundered suddenly, and some 600 terrified emigrants were thrown into the water and drawn down with the sinking ship. Those who could swim tried to reach the boats, but these were already too full, and their occupants beat off the drowning wretches with oars.

The boats kept together for some hours. Practically all of their occupants were passengers and were not used to handling such craft. The boat occupied by the survivors landed at Grimsby was a life-boat.

The rescue of those on the life-boat took place at 8 o'clock in the morning of June 29, the survivors consisting of twenty men, one of them a seaman, six women and a girl.

Gave His Life For Others.

One of the survivors said that when he got on deck the Norge was half submerged and was rapidly getting lower in the water. Half mad with fright, the survivors all struggled for places in the boats. They fought their way to the big lifeboat, and an officer stowed in the six women and the girl and then told the men to get in.

The officer then took charge and got the boat away from the side of the Norge. Seeing that the boat was already overladen, the officer with great heroism jumped into the water and tried to board another boat which was not so full. He failed and was drowned.

In the sea by this time was a mass of struggling men, women and children, gasping and choking from the effects of the water. The boat rowed clear of this seething inferno, and just as she drew away the Norge went down.

A SCORE WERE KILLED.

"Chicago Limited" at 50 Miles An Hour Plunged Into Open Siding—Canadian Dead—40 Passengers Injured.

St. Louis, July 4.—A special from Litchfield, Ill., says that the Chicago Limited, on the Wabash Railroad, due in St. Louis at 7 p.m., and half an hour late, was wrecked last night inside the city limits.

The train struck an open switch and was overturned and seven cars were burned.

It is believed that twenty persons perished in the second and third coaches, and that forty were injured.

The injured are being cared for in the St. Francis Hospital in this city. A partial list of the dead follows:

St. Pierre V. Bald, Montreal.
L. O. Eschald, Chicago.
Mrs. C. F. Luther, Milwaukee.
Dan H. Davis, Decautar, Ill.
Joseph Barder, North-Dakota.
James V. Sanford, engineer, Decaur, Ill.
Samuel V. Smith, fireman, Decatur, Ill.
Mrs. Perkins, Chicago.
I. R. Mills, Decatur, Ill.

The train consisted of seven cars, all heavily loaded with passengers. The three rear cars, a diner and two sleepers, were not derailed. The other four cars were piled up in an indescriminate mass, and with the crushed freight cars took fire.

The engine, after running into the switch, struck a string of freight cars, and with the first three coaches was piled into a heap across the track and caught fire immediately.

The track was reported clear at the last station, and as the train was running about fifty miles an hour the open switch was not noticed.

It is probable that the exact number of the dead will not be known for several days, as the passengers here assert that bodies were cremated in the burning debris.

The following is a list of dead and injured sent to President Joseph Ramsay, jr., of the Wabash Railroad last night:

Dead—I. R. Mills, Decatur, Ill.; H. M. Deitrich, Toledo, Ohio; Jacob P. Berder, Hart River, N. D.; Rev. N. M. Mills, Bridgeton, N. J.; R. A. Deitrich, Chicago; Florence Smith, Chicago; Hugo Peero, Montreal; Miss Hakins, Chicago; Mrs. C. F. Luchere, Milwaukee; J. B. Stanford, engineer, Decatur; Howard Groves, train despatcher, Decatur; unknown boy, about 15 years; Daniel H. Davis, Decatur; T. A. Eschstadt, Chicago; Miss Perkins, Chicago.

EXPLOSION AMONG FIREWORKS.

Caused Panic and Injured Many in Crowded Retail Store.

Worcester, Mass., July 4.—Accidentally stepping on a large torpedo, Albert Childs, a clerk in a store, started a fire Saturday night which caused the explosion of $700 worth of fireworks, cutting off 40 customers and clerks who were in the store from the only exit.

Caught under a freight elevator as it was descending with 25 women on it into the cellar, Manuel Oviginian was taken to an hospital, where his right leg was amputated. Jacob Bedik of New Haven is dangerously ill from inhaling fumes, and 25 women and children received minor injuries.

Vancouver Still Aground.

Montreal, July 4.—A message received last night by the Dominion Line agent says that the Vancouver is still aground in Lake St. Peter. A number of attempts have been made to get her off.

WHO FIRED THE SHOT?

Warrant Out For High Constable Tisdale of Oxford Charging Him With Shooting Wm. Swartz.

Woodstock, July 4.—As a result of the shooting of William Swartz, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel at Embro on Friday night, a warrant was sworn out yesterday for the arrest of William Tisdale, high constable of Oxford County, charging him with shooting without proper justification.

Meanwhile Swartz lies in the jail with the bullet lodged in the fleshy part of his thigh. The shooting took place while he was fleeing from Constable Tisdale, who had placed him under arrest. Tisdale had arrested him on the charge of common assault, preferred by his wife, and was standing in the hotel corridor talking when Swartz ducked and fled by a rear door to the back yard. Both Tisdale and the chief followed in close pursuit. The course was though a shed and over a fence, and while alighting on the ground after scaling the fence a shot was fired from a 32-calibre revolver. Who fired the shot will be determined at the investigation which is to follow. The accused charges Tisdale. Chief Zeats says the revolver was discharged while Swartz was making good his escape, but by whom he knows not.

Constable Tisdale says he will make a full and complete statement when the proper time comes. Swartz is not yet out of danger, the doctors say.

Whitby Old Boys' Jubilee.

Whitby, July 4.—Yesterday, the third day of the Ontario County Jubilee, the religious aspect of the celebration was emphasized by the presence of former pastors in the pulpits. In All Saints Rev. Canon Cayley of Toronto, preached, Rev. Dr. German preached in the Methodist Tabernacle, Rev. Dr. Ballantyne in the morning, and Rev. Norman McGillivray of Cornwall, in the evening, preached to the United Presbyterian churches, and in the afternoon a memorial service was held in the spacious grounds of the Ontario Ladies' College.

Daring Burglary Near Kingston.

Kingston, July 4.—Burglars entered the store and dwelling of J. R. Smith of Westbrooke on Thursday night and stole $785. The entry was made by a cellar window to the store, where the cash drawer was taken. The men then entered the postoffice and took the money there. Preceeding upstairs they entered the room where Smith was sleeping. One of them crawled quietly to the foot of the bed and deliberately searched Smith's clothes, from which he took a roll of bills and some change.

Carried Sunday Passengers.

Kingston, July 4.—When the steamer America reached port at 1 o'clock yesterday, after taking the 14th Regiment to Cape Vincent, it was found that landing was debarred, as she had passengers on board and under the Sunday laws could not come into port. The Kingstonians had gone across to camp with the soldiers. The matter was finally arranged and the steamer went into her berth.

Open Verdict Against Incendiary.

Rainy River, July 4.—The verdict at the inquest on the death of little Mary Lillian Reese in the Miller fire on June 18, attributed her demise to suffocation in the fire caused by some person unknown. William Robinson, who had boarded with the Millers and quarreled with them, and whose trunk was the only one saved, was suspected.

MINISTER OF MILITIA WORKING THE RACE CRY.

Not able to defend their conduct in dragging politics into the organization and management of the volunteer force, Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, has stooped to the level of the pot-house politician and is trying to drag in the race cry to cover up his and his heroic colleagues' tracks. Finding that the race and creed cry had in the past a powerful effect upon the elections in the Province of Quebec, but now dying out, this worthy is attempting again in a most disreputable way to rouse a prejudice against Lord Dundonald in the minds of the French-Canadians.

So far is this carried that even the Montreal Witness finds itself compelled to raise its voice in condemnation.

In dealing with this question, it says:—

Sir Frederick Borden has twice recently committed the same offence. On Monday last, in a widely-published interview, he said: "The fact that we added two officers, with the substantive rank of colonial, in no way affected their pay. Both officers had served in South Africa, and one of them, whose name the General struck off, was the only French-Canadian in the list." Again, last Thursday, in the House of Commons, Sir Frederick Borden said, in the course of his speech, "he regretted that Lord Dundonald, in organizing the regiment, had ignored the name of the district officer commanding. Col. Roy was a French-Canadian. He did not know whether that had anything to do with Lord Dundonald's course." These extremely mischievous appeals to race prejudice cast an unpleasant suggestion of weakness about Sir Frederick's position. THEY ARE CALCULATED TO MAKE OUR MILITIAMEN TAKE RACIAL SIDES AND TO STIR UP ILL-WILL BETWEEN THEM. That Lord Dundonald had any such petty and foolish race antipathies we do not believe, but he does seem to have had a distaste for men, whatever their race, owing their positions to political rather than to military considerations.

"I remember a discussion about miracles that I once heard in a law court. An attorney was examining a witness, trying to get him to show that he understood the nature and the meaning of miracles, and finally he said:

"'Now, my good man, you know what a miracle is, I am sure.

"'Well, I ain't so positive,' the witness answered, uneasily.

"'Let us, then, illustrate the matter. For instance,' said the lawyer, 'suppose that you should fall from the top of a church steeple without hurting yourself. What would you call that?'

"'I guess I'd call it an accident,' said the witness.

"The lawyer frowned. Then he took courage and tried again.

"'Very good. Very true. It would be an accident,' he said. 'But suppose you should fall from the top of the church steeple without hurting yourself a second time. What would it be, then?'

"The witness rubbed his forehead and meditated.

"'I jidge it would be a coincidence,' he said slowly.

"'Oh, dear me,' exclaimed the lawyer. 'Can't I make you understand at all?' He hesitated, frowning, and then again he took courage. 'Now, my man,' he resumed, 'see here. I'll continue on the same line. Suppose you should fall from the top of that steeple a third time—mind you, a third time. What, then, would you call it?'

"'A third time?' said the witness.

"'A third time,' repeated the lawyer.

"'Well,' said the man, 'I guess I'd call it a habit.'"

A political lieutenant once announced to the late Senator Quay a disastrous defeat, making the announcement in very blunt, brusque terms.

Senator Quay gave the man one of his peculiar, direct glances and smiled slightly. Then he said:

"You have broken this news gently. You remind me of an Irishman. This Irishman had great faith in his diplomacy and delicacy, and one day, when a boy was killed at the quarry, he told the men to leave everything in his hands and he would break the news to the boy's mother as it should be done.

"So he went home, he put on a black suit and a black tie, and he knocked at the door of the boy's mother's house.

"'Good mornin' ma'am,' he said. 'Tis a sad accident yer bye Tom's gold watch has had.'

"'Why,' said the mother. 'Tom never had a gold watch.'

"'Sure, an' that's lucky,' said the news-bearer, 'for there's twenty ton of rock fallen on him.'"

Baron Moncheur, the Belgian Minister, visited Baltimore last month. At a dinner in Baltimore he said:

"The spirit of business enterprise and speculation is what impresses me most profoundly in America. For instance, I was riding one day on the outskirts of Washington, and at a certain place I dismounted and got a little boy to hold my horse. I was gone about ten minutes, and on my return I found the first boy gone and another, smaller one, standing at the horse's head.

"'How is this?' I said. 'You are not the boy I left my horse with.'

"'No, sir,' said the tiny urchin, 'I speckilated and bought the job off the other fellow for a dime.'

"Of course, after that," the Minister ended, "it was impossible for me to 'bear' the market."

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

A young man named Bontsteel, who was an employee at the Vandervoort box factory in Sidney, on Saturday met with a painful accident. He was engaged in operating a circular saw when his right hand came in contact with the fast revolving cutter with the result that one finger was taken off and others badly lacerated. J. ARTHUR MARSH

THE SICILIAN.

His Life Is Hedged About by a Series of Absurd Superstitions.

People of Sicily are vastly superstitious. The Sicilian believes, to give a few examples, in the existence of a double tailed lizard which condescends to take in its mouth the winning numbers of the lottery. He believes it is unlucky to marry or begin a journey on a Tuesday or a Friday. He believes in the power of maledictions and of the evil eye and attempts to defend himself against them by wearing amulets, such as the corno, a coral imitation of the horn of the goat; by spitting three times on the ground while pronouncing a magic formula or (in certain districts) by invoking the name of Virgil, who somehow acquired during the middle ages a bizarre reputation as a magician. He believes in sorcerers, of whom a goodly number practice professionally on his island, selling to him among other wonder working charms grotesque colored images of St. Paul to be attached to barren fruit trees and barrels in which wine has soured. He believes that a person born on a Friday is able to predict the future and that a person born on June 29 (the fete of St. Paul, who was unharmed by the viper which encircled his hand) is able to do both these things and to charm serpents besides.

SORRY SHE SPOKE.

The Mistake That Was Made by a New York Milliner.

One of the richest and most prominent society women in New York caught an unexpected glimpse of the reverse side of a Fifth avenue tradeswoman's manners the other day. The society woman in question is very quiet and unostentatious in her dress, and it is only the appointment of her equipage that betrays the fact that she is wealthy. She stopped her carriage outside the establishment of a fashionable milliner, entered and addressed the proprietress.

"I see you have in your window a sign, 'Apprentice Wanted,'" she began.

The milliner eyed her contemptuously from the crown of her modest bonnet to the tip of her common sense shoe.

"You would not do at all," she said. "I want a ladylike person who can wait on customers."

"I wished to place one of my maids with some one from whom she could learn millinery while I am abroad," continued the visitor quietly, "but I'm afraid you would not do."

As the footman opened the carriage door for his mistress the horror stricken milliner recognized too late the livery of one of the "first families" of New York.

CROWS AND ROOKS.

There Are Many Points of Difference Between These Birds.

Scientifically corvus is the generic title of the bird family which includes crows, rooks, ravens and jackdaws.

A main distinction between crows and rooks is that black and gray crows, which are found always in pairs, are migrants, retreating southward with the advance of winter, while rooks are gregarious and remain where they have been in the habit of nesting. Crows, too, are carrion eaters, while rooks, though fond of grubs and worms, will not touch dead things unless driven to do so by hunger.

The most obvious individual points of difference between the two are the absence of feathers from the face of the adult rook, giving it a vulture-like look, to which its characteristics otherwise hardly entitle it, and the fact that its feathers are of a rich purple black, almost iridescent, while the plumage of the black crow is in shading somewhat like a badly polished boot and possesses but little luster.

Wooden Shoes In Holland.

"The wooden shoe," said a native of Holland, "is worn almost exclusively by the peasant classes, and they find them more comfortable than the leather shoes that are worn in America. The foot is clad in a heavy woolen stocking and then slipped into the shoe without fastening. They never fall off because the people are used to wearing them. They would not exchange, because any other kind would not be comfortable. The shoes are of elm wood and cost from 10 to 15 cents of American money. Two pairs will last a year."

Animal Criminals.

As a species of hardened criminals among placid herbivorous animals none is worse than the bison, or American buffalo. Toward man and beast and even among themselves these vicious, vindictive and agile brutes, whose half brothers on the other continents do not fear even the terrific onslaughts of lions and tigers, are in a state of almost continual warfare. They are among the wickedest rogues ever seen in a zoo.—McClure's Magazine.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. T. J. BOYLE.

The Only Woman Theatrical Manager in the South.

To Nashville belongs the unique distinction, so far as known, of having the only woman theatrical manager south of the Ohio river, in the person of Mrs. T. J. Boyle, manager of the Grand Opera House. Mrs. Boyle is a native of New Orleans, who arrived in Nashville seven or eight years ago with her husband to look after the old opera house on Cherry street. The place was operated for combinations, and was at one time one of the most popular houses in the south.

MRS. T. J. BOYLE.

About six years ago Mr. John D. Hopkins of Chicago opened the Grand as a stock theater, but he met with so much discouragement that he soon tired of the game, and the Boyles came into possession of the theater. They had been interested with Mr. Hopkins, and, though they realized the task of popularizing the old time stock company, they stuck to their work and eventually, through the untiring energy of Mrs. Boyle, won success. When the theater was burned, Mrs. Boyle, nothing daunted, leased the Masonic theater and continued her success. The company has been steadily improved each year until now it is said to be one of the best in the United States. The success of the enterprise is due to the indomitable energy of Mrs. Boyle, who is not only an excellent manager, but who is popular with the masses.

Mrs. Boyle's success in the theatrical world has been phenomenal. In 1901 she was offered Pike's Opera House, at Cincinnati, but declined the offer. Several New Orleans capitalists have endeavored to interest her in a house in New Orleans to no avail.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Tears and Business.

A serious reason why women do not climb up faster in the business world is because they cannot or will not take advantage of criticisms and do not grow. This is the fault of no one but the woman herself.

"What is the use?" exclaimed one man to a woman who was bemoaning the slow progress of women. "You can't tell them anything. They won't take a criticism for their own good or in a general way. Just say 'boo' to them and they'll turn on the tears. No man with any self respect is going to stand for that. So we let them go their own way. No wonder they don't 'get anywhere.'"

Now, why is this true? Why do women "turn on the tears" when they are met with a friendly criticism? It is true they apply any little suggestion directly to themselves, and, instead of being benefited and putting on the shoe if it fits, they wail and weep because they have been "accused." Every one that thinks about this phase of the business woman's existence knows that it is right here she fails. A man makes a mistake, he takes his medicine, and the disease is cured and he grows by the experience. Not so with woman.

The tears win every time. No man will persist in the face of a torrent of weeping. No matter what the trouble is, he runs if the woman becomes tearful. He learns by experience, too; he won't try again to instruct or to criticise. And because the woman has won in that one instance she never gets another chance to profit by a criticism.—Pittsburg Press.

Use Your Treasures.

The middle aged woman or one whose children have grown past the destructive age should get all the comfort there is in the pretty things that she has accumulated. It is folly to hoard the embroidered table decorations, keep her silver wrapped in cotton flannel bags or the sofa pillows put away lest they be worn out. Now is the time to enjoy them. If she thinks that it would be better to keep them for the children she should remember that when these things fall into their possession they will be out of fashion, but not antique enough to have any value beyond the sentimental one that "they were mother's." Most grownup children take pleasure in seeing their mother's home kept in the present fashion, and if they do not they certainly do not deserve as a legacy what might have made their mother's life more comfortable and more enjoyable.

Plaster Casts.

Good plaster casts of well known reliefs and figures can be had for small sums, but their possibilities are by no means so generally appreciated. Those of the better sort often are charming, save for the crudity of the white plaster, and this best can be overcome without much effort by a really simple process. All that is needed are yellow beeswax, a soft cloth, good muscles and a fire. The wax must be melted and kept where it is warm enough to remain in the liquid state. The plaster must be heated and kept warm during the process. For the rest a cloth is dipped into the wax and rubbed over the plaster surface little by little, using more and more of the wax as required and the rubbing being kept up vigorously until the whole surface takes a warm, rich, yellowish tone and shows a sort of subdued polish which adds greatly to the depth of color.

Renewing Old Chairs.

If you are clever with upholstering tools you can easily manage the dilapidation of your chairs. In the first place, the old covers must be removed, lifting out all the nails carefully, and the old stuff will serve as a pattern by which to cut out the new, be it brocade, tapestry or velvet. Having done this, stretch the fabric tightly over the seat, nailing it firmly down on each side to keep it in place, and then cutting off all the superfluous stuff. To make these rough edges quite tidy, either a gimp or a narrow furniture fringe must then be put all around, using either brass or copper pyramid studs.

Iron Holders.

I make my ironing holders by cutting a piece from the top of an old kid boot and putting it between the folds of cloth I use for a holder, then binding around the edge, says an old housekeeper. It prevents burning the hand, and it can be used much thinner. A thick holder cramps the hand.

Submarine Wells.

Submarine wells are found in many places. The supply of drinking water drawn upon by the population of Bahrein, on the shores of the Persian gulf, comes from springs which have their origin in the hills of Oman, 500 miles away and which rise in the salt waters of the gulf.

A diver, winding a large goatskin bag round his left arm and grasping with one hand its mouth, takes in the other hand a heavy stone secured by a strong line to his boat. Plunging with this to the bottom, he instantly opens the bag over the rushing jet of fresh water and closes it again as he springs up in the ascending current. The stone is then hauled up, and after a short breathing space the diver repeats the process.

Thus a constant supply of fresh water is found in a locality as dry and hot as any on earth, where there are no land springs and where no rain falls.—London Standard.

A Forgiving Chinaman.

The following remarkable story appears in Mr. Whigham's "Manchuria and Korea:" "A Cossack in a fit of drunkenness had shot a Chinaman, and it was necessary to bring several of the men to the bedside of the dying victim for purpose of identification of the culprit. The Chinaman, however, refused absolutely to single out the guilty man, saying, 'Why should he be killed, since I must die in any case?' Then they explained to him that the man would only be severely punished, to which the Chinaman responded that since he forgave the culprit there was no reason why he should suffer. Then the theory of the punishment was adduced as an argument—the Cossack must be punished in order that he might not repeat the offense. 'But,' said the Chinaman, 'he will never do it again when he knows that I forgive him,' and there the matter ended."

A Blush Scientifically Defined.

Not long since we were asked to give a scientific definition of the word "blush." We have made an effort, from an anatomical and physiological point of view, to give the definition. A blush is a temporary erythema and calorific effulgence of the physiognomy, aetiologized by one perceptiveness of the sensorium when in a predicament of unequilibrility from a sense of shame, anger or other cause, eventuating in a paresis of the vasomotor filaments of the facial capillaries, whereby, being divested of their elasticity, they are suffused with a radiance effeminating from an intimidated praecordia.

Democratic Belgium.

Belgium is probably the most democratic of all the monarchical states. The king of the Belgians not only does not wear a crown, but has not even got a crown to wear! No coronation ceremony is known to the constitution, the sovereign inaugurating his reign simply by taking an oath to govern according to the laws. Moreover, the births of his children, if he has any, must be registered in exactly the same phraseology and in the same set of books as the births of his humblest subjects.

"SCARRED FOR LIFE"

Skin diseases in many cases may need the "inward" application to remove the taint from the blood.

But many a once handsome countenance is "scarred for life" for lack of using such a healing agent as Dr. Agnew's Ointment. Only needs a few applications of this magic healer to any skin disease to clear away all signs of outward disorder and leave the affected part as smooth and soft as an infant's cheek. 30

TOPICS . . . BRIEFLETS & SHORT SUMMER STORIES.

There is some talk of the 49th Regiment parading through the city on their return from camp.

This is as it should be, and no doubt the sturdy sons of the 49th will be glad of the chance to step through the streets of this beautiful city on their return.

This is the Fourth of July, the Dominion Day of the country to the south of us, the day on which so many fire crackers, pistols, guns and things are shot off; so many accidents occur and some deaths recorded, owing to the foolhardy and excessive zeal in celebrating.

"Brer" Spence, of the Kingston Whig, has our heartfelt sympathy. He, 'tis said, purchased a new press somewhere in the United States, costing a large sum; several thousands of dollars. Three days after it was cleared from the Custom House the Dominion Government removed the duty on printing presses. This was surely a case of pounds, shillings—S-pence.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Billous headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) usable the two visitors started after the lilies.

"Mind you don't tip me over," said Alice. "I can't swim."

"If I do I'll rescue you or drown with you," he answered gallantly. What silly nothings these two young people uttered as they made the circuit of that long wood bordered mill pond! One at least was just tasting the first sweet illusion of love, and the glassy surface of the water that reflected the trees bending over it, the bunches of water flag growing here and there and the scattered patches of broad lily pads, with now and then a white blossom, made a most picturesque background for the girl who sat in the stern. Her piquant face, shaded by a broad sun hat, was fairer to his eyes than any of the lilies she plucked, and as she drew one sleeve up a little to reach for them the round arm and dimpled hand she thrust into the water looked tempting enough to kiss. The miller had shut the gate and gone home when they returned to the mill.

"Do you know," remarked Frank when they had left the mill behind and were driving through a bit of woods, "that I have anticipated this visit for weeks? I know scarcely anything about the country, and it is all a revelation to me. I've seen pictures of old mills and ponds covered with lilies, but no painter can ever put the reality on canvas. Why, that great wheel, covered with moss and churning away all day so steadily, with a willow bending over it, is a poem in itself!"

"The mill was built over a hundred years ago," observed Alice, "and has been grinding away ever since. I love to visit it, for it takes me back to childhood, and," she added, a little sadly, "it makes me live over the happiest days of my life, when father used to take me with him everywhere he went."

"'But the mill will never grind with the water that has passed,'" quoted Frank, "and 'the tender grace of a day that is dead will never come back to me.' I wish I had been country born. I think I've missed countless pages of pleasant memories. Do you know," he added, turning to his companion, "I am rapidly falling in love with the country and—and its pretty sights?"

"Whose idea was it to pounce upon me that way at school?" exclaimed Alice suddenly, throwing off her retrospective mood and smiling again. "Was it yours or Bert's?"

"I confess I coaxed Bert to do it. We had to take the train at 5 o'clock in the morning and have coffee and rolls at the station for breakfast and pie and sandwiches for dinner."

"And all to surprise one poor little schoolma'am and break up her school," put in Alice. "Was it worth all that annoyance?"

"Up to the present moment," answered Frank. "I must honestly say it was. This drive and the mill I consider cheap at any price."

"I don't mean this part of the surprise," said Alice, blushing a little at his open admiration. And then in self defense she added: "What has become of the Gypsy? Bert writes me that you two are planning trips in her already."

"She is still in winter quarters," answered Frank. "I've been too busy studying law to do more than think of her. I've reformed, you know."

What silly nothings these two young people uttered!

Alice made no reply. The memory of what he had so evidently wished her to infer regarding his reasons for this new departure came to her in an instant and brought a little wonderment as to the possible outcome of it. Turn which way she would and propose what topic she might, he seemed bound to use it as a vehicle of his undisguised admiration. She had wished to consider him as a friend, because he had been a friend to her adored brother when that brother needed one, and while she had written him a dozen chatty letters which might be printed for all the privacy they contained, she had studiously refrained from allowing him to infer even that she had any special interest in his actions.

When they arrived home Albert was on the piazza and Aunt Susan had supper waiting. The table was set with blue ware of a very old and quaint pattern, and when Alice had filled a bowl with lilies for a centerpiece they gathered around and "passed things" in true country fashion. The evening was unusually warm for June, and after the two young men had smoked and chatted for half an hour Alice appeared dressed in spotless white, with a half open lily in her hair and another at her throat. The moon, which was nearing its full, shone through the open spaces of the vineclad porch and added an ethereal touch to the sylphlike picture she presented.

"Well," she remarked cheerfully as she seated herself near her brother, "my time is yours, and what can I do to entertain you?"

"I had planned to take Frank to a trout brook tomorrow morning," responded Albert, "and in the afternoon you and he can hunt for mill ponds and grottoes, if you like, or gather laurel."

"And leave me alone all the forenoon?" put in Alice. "No, thank you. I'm shut up for five days, and you can't get rid of me so easily. Why can't I go too?"

"I'm agreeable," replied her brother, "only a trout brook is not nice walking for a lady."

"I'm aware of that," she responded, "and you two can go fishing, and I'll hunt for laurel in the meantime. We can take a basket of lunch with us and make a day of it in the woods." Then, as a possible contingency presented itself to her, she added: "Why not let me invite my friend, Abby Miles, to go for company? She and I can pick laurel, and when you have caught all the harmless little trout you want we can meet where we leave the wagon and have a picnic."

"That suits me," said her brother, and without waiting for further discussion this diplomatic fairy in white arose and remarked: "I'll get a shawl, and then I'll trouble you, Mr. Nason, to escort me over to Abby's. It's only a few rods, and I want you to meet her. She's ever so nice."

The plan as mapped by Alice was carried out to the letter, and when the two young men joined the girls at noon they found a broad flat rock in the woods had been covered with a tablecloth and spread with a tempting meal. The girls had gathered great bunches of pink laurel, and a cluster of it decked the table. After dinner Alice insisted that they visit the mill pond once more, and when they returned at night with two baskets of trout and laurel and pond lilies enough to stock a flower stand the day was voted an eminent success.

Frank made one error, however, for just before they left the mill he slipped away unobserved and, finding the miller, put a bit of paper into his hand with the remark, "Keep this to pay for the boat," and left him hurriedly. When the old man made examination he found he had a five dollar bill. To surprises of this kind he was not accustomed, and before noon the next day there wasn't a man, woman or child in Sandgate who had not heard of it.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THAT evening Frank begged for music, and Alice sung for two long hours. When the concert was ended Albert observed: "If there's one song in the house that you have not sung, Alice, I wish you would sing it. I hate to have you omit any."

"I have only sung what I was asked to," she replied. "Is not that so, Mr. Nason?"

"That is true," replied he boldly, "and you have not sung one that I wouldn't enjoy hearing again tonight."

"Oh, I have enjoyed them all," said Albert, "only I thought you might have missed one, and, as Frank remarked coming home that he was hungry for music, I wanted him satisfied."

The next day they attended church, only this time all three walked back together. Alice was graciousness personified. All her jokes and smiles and all her conversation were lavished upon Frank. Several times Frank, who intuitively felt she did not wish to be left alone with him, started to ask her to take a walk that Sunday evening, but each time his discretion prevailed. "If she is willing to listen to any lovemaking, she has tact enough to give me a chance," he thought, "and unless she is I had better keep still." The evening was one to tempt Cupid, for the moonlight fell checkered through the half naked elms along the roadway, and where here and there a group of maples stood was a bit of shadow. The whippoorwills had just returned to Sandgate, and over the meadows scattered fireflies twinkled. The houses along the way to the village were wide apart and the evening air just right for a loitering walk. To Frank, anxious to say a few words that would further his hopes in the direction of this bewitching girl, it seemed a waste of good time not to take advantage of the evening. It was almost past and the lights in the houses across the valley had long since vanished when he obtained a little consolation.

The charm of the evening had stilled conversation, and neither had spoken for a long time when he said rather disconsolately: "My anticipated visit is almost over. May I ask you to go in and sing just one song for me, Miss Page?"

"With pleasure," she responded in her sweetest tone; "what shall it be?"

"I will leave that to your selection," he replied.

Without a word she led the way in and began searching among the pile of music on the piano, and, finding what she wanted, opened and spread the music on the rack.

It was "Ben Bolt."

She sang it in a minor key, and as the opening words, "Oh, don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt," floated out on the still evening air they seemed to him fraught with a new meaning and that a veritable sweet Alice was bidding him, another Ben Bolt, not to forget her. When the last note had faded into the night air she turned her now serious eyes toward him.

"I thank you," he almost whispered. "And there won't be many waking moments in my future when I shall not think of—sweet Alice!"

It was not much of a love scene, but to him it seemed a wide open door of hope, and when many miles separated them, and for days, weeks and months afterward, even when doing his best to crowd dull law reports into his brain, the one tender glance she gave him and the tones of her voice came back with unfailing accuracy.

The first visit of Frank Nason to the Page home, his sleighrides with Alice and his appearance at church had caused no end of comment. It was known that he had been a classmate of Albert and came from Boston, and later Aunt Susan vouchsafed the information that she "guessed he came from one o' the first families and that he appeared right well behaved."

It was all she really did know, for both Alice and her brother were considerate of her failings and knew it was not safe to discuss their visitor in her presence. The tempest of gossip had not more than half quieted down when it received a regular boom from his second coming. The pupils of the north end district school spread the news of their teacher's unexpected callers and that she had dismissed school at once and gone on with the stranger. Old Amos Curtis, the miller, told of their visit and, wonder upon wonder, how the next day "her beau" had given him a five dollar bill "jest fer lettin' 'em use a leaky old boat fer an hour."

She turned her now serious eyes toward him.

The buxom Abby Miles had the best and longest story to tell, and her praise of Mr. Nason, how polite he was and "how he couldn't keep his eyes off'n Alice all the afternoon," was whispered to every girl she knew. The five dollar incident created the most gossip, however. The miller had remarked that a "young feller who threw money round that way must be rich," and that remark soon grew into a story that Alice Page's beau was worth a million and that she was engaged to him.

As might be expected, the subject of all this gossip heard none of it until the storm had reached alarming proportions. Mrs. Mears was the first one to tell the extent of the gossip.

"They tell me," said that worthy matron to Alice one Sunday after church, "that you ain't likely to teach school after this summer."

"And why not?" answered Alice. "Don't I give satisfaction?"

"Oh, 'tain't that. I guess you can imagine the reason, and I want to be the first to congratulate you. They tell me he's worth a pile o' money, an' he's sartinly well favored so far as looks goes; but, then, 'handsome is as handsome does' was allus my motto."

Alice colored.

"Do you mean Mr. Nason, my brother's friend?" she said seriously.

"Why, who else would I mean? I've heard that you was to be married this fall and that he is worth a million. They say he told Amos Curtis he was, though I don't believe that. But anyway, Amos says he gave him $5 'jest fer usin' his old boat that wa'n't worth splittin' up fer kindlin's!'"

"It's not true, not one word of it," exclaimed Alice angrily, "and if you care for me one bit I wish you would tell everybody I said so."

She waited to hear no more, nor for Aunt Susan, who had lingered to chat with some one, but walked home hurriedly, as if to hide herself. Once in the silent house she began to cool off.

"I won't believe he told Amos he was worth a million," she said to herself. "He isn't so stupid as that. But I am afraid the silly boy did give him $5, which has started all this gossip."

When Aunt Susan came in she fairly pounced upon her. "Why haven't you told me, auntie, about all this gossip that's going the rounds regarding Mr. Nason and myself? I know you have heard it."

"It's all nonsense, Alice," answered that lady rather sharply, "and you are foolish to listen to 'em. I've heard it, of course, but so long as it's no discredit to you, why, let it go into one ear and out t'other, same as I do! Folks must talk in this town, an' what they're sayin' 'bout you ought to make you feel proud—that a young fellow like him and worth money wanted to come courtin', and he certainly showed he did or I'm no judge."

"He's got Aunt Susan on his side as well as Bert," Alice thought, "and I am glad I kept him at a distance, just to pay him for being so silly with his money."

Late that afternoon Alice called upon Abby Miles and talked about everything except the subject she most wanted to talk about, and then as Abby usually had a Sunday evening caller, Alice came home at dusk. Never before had the house seemed so lonesome, and as she sat on the porch and tried to talk with Aunt Susan her thoughts were elsewhere.

When the lights across the valley, which served as curfew by saying bedtime when they went out, had disappeared, she came in and, seating herself in the dark at the piano, softly played the chords and hummed the words of a song.

"It'll come out all right," said Aunt Susan to herself, and she waited till Alice called to her to come in and go to bed.

CHAPTER XIX.

FRANK NASON had consoled himself during the many months of hard study with visions of a yachting trip in July and August, when perhaps in some manner Alice Page could be induced to come, with his mother and sisters to chaperon her and her brother and some other friends to complete the party.

He had the Gypsy put in first class shape and all her staterooms refurnished, and one in particular, which he intended Alice should occupy, upholstered in blue. So well formed were his plans that he timed the start so as to utilize the July moon for the first ten days and mapped out a trip taking in all the Maine coast, spending a week at Bar Harbor, and then a run up as far as Nova Scotia.

He had described all the charms of this trip to Alice and extended to her the most urgent invitation. He had obtained her brother's promise to supplement it and also to make one of the party, and he had persuaded his sister Blanch to aid him with his mother, but he had met discouragement on all sides. In the first place, Alice wrote it was doubtful if she could go. It would be a delightful outing and one she would enjoy, but it would not be right to leave Aunt Susan alone for so long, and then, as her school did not close until the last of June, she would have no time to get ready.

To cap the climax of Frank's discomfiture, when July came his mother announced that she had decided to go to the mountains for the summer.

"It's no use, Bert," he said to his friend one evening. "I wanted your sister to go to Maine with us and mother and the girls and a few more to make a party, but it's no go. I can't induce your sister to join us, and it's no use if she would, for mother has determined to go to the mountains, and that settles it. If you and I have any outing on the yacht we must make up a gander party."

"That suits me just as well as, and in fact better than, the other plan," replied Albert consolingly. "If we have a lot of ladies along we must dance attendance upon them, and if not we can fish, smoke, play cards, sing or go to sleep when we feel like it. I tell you, Frank," he continued, evidently desiring to cheer up that young man, "girls are all right as companions at home or at balls and theaters, but on a yacht they are in the way."

A week afterward, and early one bright morning, the Gypsy, with skipper, crew and a party of eight jolly young men on board, sailed out of Boston and that night dropped anchor under the lee of an island in Casco bay. She remained there one full day and the next ran to Boothbay and found shelter in a landlocked cove forming part of the coast line of Southport island. It was after dinner next day, and while the rest of the party were either playing cards or napping in hammocks under the awning, that Albert Page took one of the boats, his pipe and sketchbook and rowed down the coast a mile to an inlet he had noticed the day before. The outer point of this was formed by a bold cliff that he desired to sketch, and pulling the boat well up behind the inner point, tying the painter to a rock and taking the cushions along, he found a shady spot and sat down. The sloping rock he selected for a seat was a little damp, but he thought nothing of it, and lighting his pipe began sketching.

He worked for an hour putting the weed draped rocks and long swells that broke over them into his book, and then, lulled perhaps by the monotonous rhythm of the ocean, lay back on the cushions and fell asleep. The next he knew he was awakened by a cold sensation and found the tide had risen until it wet his feet. Hastily getting up, he took the cushions and returned to where he had left the boat, only to find it had disappeared. The rising tide had lifted the boat and painter from the rocks, and it was nowhere to be seen.

"There must be some road back up on the island," he thought, "that will lead me near the cove where the Gypsy is," and, still retaining the cushions, he started to find it. But he was a stranger to Southport island, and the farther away from the sea he got the thicker grew the tangle of scrub spruce and briers. It was too thick to see anywhere, and after a half hour of desperate scrambling the afternoon sun began to seem about due east. He had long since dropped the cushions, and finally, in sheer exhaustion, he sat down on a rock to collect himself.

"It looks as though I'm billed to stay here all night," he thought as he noted the lowering sun, "and nobody knows how much longer! There must be a road somewhere, though, and I'm going to find it if the light lasts long enough."

He started once more and had not gone ten rods ere he came to one, and then he breathed easier. His clothes were torn, his hands and face scratched by briers, and to save himself he couldn't make it seem but that the sun was setting in the east. He sat down to think. All sound of the ocean was gone, and a stillness that seemed to crawl out of the thicket was around him. He rested a few moments more and then suddenly heard the sound of wheels and presently saw, coming around the curve, an old fashioned carryall, worn and muddy, and, driving the horse at a jog trot, a man as dilapidated looking as the vehicle. Gladdened at the sight, he arose and, holding up his hand as a signal, halted the team. "Excuse me, sir," he said to the man, who eyed him curiously, "but will you tell me where I am?"

"Waal," was the answer in a slow drawl, "ye're on Southport island an' 'bout four miles from the jumpin' off place. Whar might ye be goin'? Ye looked bushed."

"I am," answered Page, "and badly bushed too. I lost my boat over back here on the shore and have had a cheerful time among the Mohawk briers. I belong to a yacht that is anchored in a cove of this island, I can't tell where, and if you will take me to her I'll pay you well."

The man in the wagon laughed.

"Say, stranger," he observed with a chuckle, "you 'mind me o' the feller that got full an' wandered round for a spell till he fetched up to a house an' sed to the man that cum to the door, 'If you will tell me who I am or whar I am or whar I want ter go I'll give ye a dollar.'"

Page had to laugh in spite of his plight, for the humorous twinkle in the old man's eyes as he uttered his joke was infectious.

"I'd like ter 'commodate ye," he added, "but as I'm carryin' Uncle Sam's mail an' must git home an' tend the light, an' as ye don't know whar ye want ter go, ye best jump in an' go down to Saint's Rest, whar I live, an' in the mornin' we'll try an' hunt up yer boat."

It seemed the only thing to do, and Albert availed himself of the chance.

"Can you tell the spot where you found me?" he said to the man as they started on. "I'd like to go back there tomorrow and find my cushions."

"Waal," was the answer, "as I've druv over this road twice a day for nigh on to thirty year, I'm tolerable familiar with it. My name's Terry, an' I'm keeper o' the light at the Cape an' carry the mail to sorter piece out on. Who might ye be?"

"My name's Page, and I'm from Boston, and a lawyer by profession," replied Albert.

Uncle Terry eyed him rather sharply.

"I wouldn't 'a' took ye fer one," he said. "Ye look too honest. I ain't much stuck on lawyers," he added with a chuckle. "I've had 'sperence with 'em. One of 'em sold me a hole in the ground onct, an' it cost me the hull o' twenty years' savin's! Ye'll 'scuse me fer bein' blunt—it's my natur."

"Oh, I don't mind," responded Albert laughingly. "But you mustn't judge us all by one rascal."

They drove on, and as they jogged up and down the sharp hills he caught sight here and there of the ocean, and alongside the road, which consisted of two ruts, a path and two grass grown ridges, he saw wild roses in endless profusion. On either hand was an interminable thicket. In the little valleys grew masses of rank ferns and on the ridges, interspersed between the wild roses, clusters of red bunchberries. The sun was almost down when they reached the top of a long hill and he saw at its foot a small harbor connected with the ocean by a narrow inlet and around it a dozen or more brown houses. Beyond was a tangle of rocks and, rising above them, the top of a white lighthouse. Uncle Terry, who had kept up a running fire of questions all the time, halted the horse and said:

"Ye can now take yer first look at Saint's Rest, otherwise known as the Cape. We ketch some lobsters an' fish here an' hev prayer meetin's once a week."

Then he chirruped to the horse, and they rattled down the hill to a small store, where he left a mail pouch and then followed a winding road between the scattered houses and out to the point, where stood a neat white dwelling close beside a lighthouse.

"I'll take ye into the house," said Uncle Terry as the two alighted, "an' tell the wimmin folks to put on an extra plate, an' I'll put up the hoss."

FOR

Good Workmanship.
Reasonable Prices.
Promptness and the use of Best Materials.

Nothing

Of the CHEAP material nature finds its way into our paint.

We use nothing but pure white lead and pure Raydon oil. It would not pay us to adulterate with fish oil, coal oil or benzine—as is sometimes done to quote cut price.

Our reputation comes first and at any cost it must abide.

But While Speaking of Cost.

Consider this.

That we buy our lead and oils in huge quantities for our own use. Come to our warehouse and see for yourself the ton upon ton of lead.

Visit our vaults and see our Oils purchased in car-load lots to get the price at its lowest.

The same regarding our dry and wet colors, and painters' materials, the quantity wholesale buying gives us the greatest of advantage in selling—and in executing your work.

Gives you the advantage of having your work done with the best of materials and at low prices.

What we say of paint we can also say of Wallhangings.

No buyer of Wallhangings in Canada can lay down Wall Papers at lower prices than we do. Few can purchase at as low prices. As we have the best American and Canadian agencies.

THE YOUNG VULTURE

HE IS WILLING TO FIGHT BEFORE HE IS ABLE TO FLY.

The Fledgeling Has Wonderful Strength of Bill, Is Courageous and Aggressive and Is as Quick Almost as a Flash of Lightning.

In the south there is one bird which everybody knows whether he is a nature student or not. I refer to the turkey vulture, or turkey buzzard, as most people call him. This bird seems to be an ever present feature of the southern landscape, for look upward when you will you may see him sweeping the sky with outspread wings, wheeling in broad circles or soaring in graceful spirals, with seeming never a stroke of the mighty pinions for hours at a time.

One day I saw a vulture sailing thus, says Ernest Harold Baynes in the Boston Herald, and I carefully marked his flight until he descended from the white clouds and disappeared near the edge of a distant wood. Supposing that he had come down to feed on some carrion—a dead horse perhaps, which had been dragged just outside of the woods and left—I made the best of my way to the spot where I lost sight of the bird, that I might be a witness to the feast.

I arrived at the wood, but neither bird nor carcass could I see. Then I bethought me that this was the month of May, and that perhaps the buzzard had a nest thereabout. I hunted under the bushes, along the side of fallen trees and in some old stumps which were standing near, but not a feather was to be seen.

Presently I spied a log which lay somewhat apart in the shadow of some shrubs, and as I approached it out from somewhere came a big turkey buzzard, which quickly disappeared behind the trees. On coming up to the log, which was a large one, I found that it was hollow, and in the cavity there were two eggs, which doubtless belonged to the vulture which had just departed. They were considerably larger than the eggs of a domestic hen, and in color they were dirty white, heavily spotted with chocolate brown. I left them that I might have an opportunity to study the young.

The next time I visited the hollow log the parent birds were not in sight, but in the nest I found two downy fledgelings, which could scarcely be called pretty. They were in every way less attractive than young hawks of the same age. They expressed their disapproval of my presence by a weak growling sound.

I could not visit the spot again for some weeks, and when I did one of them had disappeared. The other was no longer in the hollow log, but standing at a little distance, and I was interested to see the change in his appearance. In the first place, he had grown tremendously; the down which had formerly covered the whole body was now confined chiefly to the head, neck and under parts, and the rest of the bird was clothed with firm black feathers. He looked fat and well fed.

I reached out my hand and caught him by one wing. But here he had a surprise for me, for he seized my finger in his hooked bill and with a turn of his head twisted off a bit of the flesh before I had time even to object. After hurriedly cleansing the wound I again advanced on the enemy, who was game enough to satisfy any one and came to the attack with open bill. Of course he was not dangerous in the least, for he was very young and could not even fly, but for a fledgeling the grip he could give with his bill was astonishing.

However, I picked him up, took him home and tethered him in the garden with a strap to one leg. The first night he ate a good meal of liver, and after that he took almost any kind of meat that was given him. I let him have carrion whenever it was convenient, but at other times he ate freshly killed frogs, fresh beef, opossum and even fish.

One night soon after I had brought him home I went out to see how he looked when he was asleep. It was so dark that his black plumage was not visible against the grass. All I could see of him was a white spot, his head, as it hung near the ground.

I approached very quietly and was within five feet when something happened. Out of the darkness there came a flash of white straight toward me with a speed which caused me to step quickly backward, and at the same instant there was a startling, rustling sound, accompanied by a guttural growl, which for a moment I did not recognize as the voice of the young vulture.

Altogether it was a most startling phenomenon, and, although I realized in a moment that the bird was in some way the cause of it, I do not know even yet just what happened. This much I know, however, that the bird rushed at me, growling with all his might, and that the flash of white was the white down of the body uncovered by the opening of the black wings.

The rushing sound was, I think, caused in some way by the wing feathers or tail feathers, or both, but whether by dragging them along the ground or otherwise I cannot tell. I tried on several occasions to find this out by approaching the young vulture when there was just light enough for me to see what happened, but he would never act in just the same way unless it was quite dark.

No doubt this is some provision of nature to protect the bird when it is young and helpless, and I can testify that it is a good one, for I am sure that few night prowling animals would care to pursue their investigations after being given so startling a reception.

Little Mrs. Blank

By CARL JOHNSON

Copyright, 1903, by Carl Johnson

If the ordinary household is upset by a theft you can realize how much worse things may be in an English house where from twelve to twenty guests are being entertained and where it would be rank insult to suspect any of them. The only way out in most cases is to lay it on to the servants and to send one or two of them packing, with twenty pound notes in their pocket alongside of a rather ambiguous certificate of character. But that doesn't bring entire satisfaction. There is the loss of the money or jewels, the humiliation of the host and the public scandal.

When the hunting season was about to open on a certain year Sir James wrote to Abraham Croft to pay him a business visit. It was not Croft's first. As a private inquiry agent he had been made use of on various occasions, and he was known to be up in his profession.

"I shall have ten gentlemen and twelve ladies in my house for two weeks, beginning on the 3d," said Sir James as he sat in the library with Croft. "Here is the list."

"Good people," commented Croft as he glanced at the names.

"None better, but I don't want anything to happen."

"I see."

"Lady Sparrow, for instance, will be sure to bring her £15,000 worth of diamonds and wear them every evening at dinner. She's proverbially careless of her jewels."

"Not a doubt of it."

"I think the rest may look out for themselves, but you must act as a guardian in a way for Lady Sparrow. You will be assistant butler for the time being."

"At your service, Sir James."

"I'll bank on my own servants, but you watch the gentlemen's valets and the ladies' maids, particularly Lady Sparrow's maid. That's all."

Among the guests was Mrs. Major Blank, whose husband was in the Fourteenth. She was handsome, petite and versatile, and she was generally spoken of as little Mrs. Blank. In a way she was not in the aristocratic set—in a money way. In another way she was popular, and it was the thing to invite her. Every hostess found her a valuable coadjutor in entertaining, and if the major never showed up and she flirted a bit with other men there was no one to speak ill of her. She was so mildly wicked, if wicked at all, that it didn't count. Of the twenty-two guests on the list she was the least known to Croft, and he was, therefore, prepared to watch her the closest. He had no sooner got sight of her, however, than he whispered to himself:

SIR JAMES HELD UP HIS HANDS IN AMAZEMENT.

"I am way off there. She's got the innocence of a baby, and it would be time thrown away to watch her."

Lady Sparrow brought her diamonds, and she brought a new maid, and she sustained her reputation for carelessness. Sometimes Sir James coaxed her into letting him lock up the jewels for the night, but they were oftener left to the care of the maid or to no care at all.

"Bound to be picked up sooner or later," mused Croft, "and I shall keep an eye on the maid. She seems demure, but I believe she knows a thing or two."

On the twelfth day of her stay Lady Sparrow got out her diamonds at mid-afternoon and saw her maid brush them up a bit. They were then left lying in their box on the table while the owner lay down for a nap before dinner. When she awoke the box was gone.

"Queer case," said Croft to Sir James three hours later. "I laid it to the maid at first, but have found that she can prove a perfect alibi. She wasn't even in the house at the time the box was taken, nor can I find that any servant was within fifty feet of Lady Sparrow's room. No one could have entered by her windows, and of course the thief is inside the house. We are going to have trouble to locate him or her, however. I've questioned every servant, and I can't say that I suspect any of them."

"But you can't suspect any of the guests!" exclaimed Sir James in consternation.

"Not in the slightest. It's a rum go, and I've got my work cut out for me."

Two days later he had still nothing to report. The servants had been questioned and cross questioned, and valets and maids had been given the "third degree," and at length Croft was satisfied of the innocence of all the underlings.

"Then it was some slick thief who got in despite your vigilance," reproachfully observed Sir James.

"I should rather say it was one of your twenty-two guests," doggedly replied the agent.

"But think of it, man!"

"Aye, I'm thinking, Sir James."

"Who among them can you possibly suspect? Why, sir, it's simply monstrous. I'd sooner pay for the jewels twice over than to hint that one of my guests is under suspicion. No, no, Croft. It's a queer case, and the thief was too much for you, and I'll pay the loss and hush up the talk."

"But I want to remain here for a week or ten days," said the agent. "I confess to being puzzled now, but my reputation is at stake, and I must try and solve the mystery."

He was told to remain and do his best, and that night as he lay in his bed he whispered in his own ears:

"It's dollars to cents that the jewels were taken by a guest. Now, who would be the soonest suspected and who the last? Let's say that Lady Sparrow stole her own diamonds, she being a seeker after notoriety. That charge won't hold, however, as she turned her whole baggage out for inspection and her fainting away when she discovered her loss was the genuine thing. Now, who is last? Why, little Mrs. Blank, of course. I'll stake all on her innocence, but I'm going to watch her. Her room is five doors away, and she says she was out on the lawn from 4 to 5 on the afternoon of the robbery, but let us see what can be turned up."

Detective Croft did something in doing nothing. He wouldn't tell Sir James or any of the guests his thoughts, and to have tried to watch the little woman as she flitted about would have been ridiculous. He therefore passed most of his time in the conservatory wondering where he could take hold of the case. On his first day he saw little Mrs. Blank enter the place twice and wander about and sing to herself. On the second day she was in and out three times. On the third day she slyly took from her pocket a letter which she read with considerable agitation and, womanlike, dropped it on the floor as she went out. She returned for it in five minutes, but Croft had possessed himself of the contents.

"Well?" briskly demanded Sir James as the agent asked for an interview that evening.

"I think I have found the jewels," was the reply.

"You think, but don't you know?"

"Not exactly. I have saved the pleasure for you. Let us go into the conservatory and lock the door."

"Well?" again queried Sir James in impatient tones.

"You have several artificial plants in tubs, your honor, and this one in particular is so light that even a woman could lift it. Will you please have it out?"

Sir James looked at the agent in a puzzled way, but seized the plant and lifted it from the tub and then held up his hands in amazement. At the bottom of the tub was the missing jewel box with contents intact.

"You see," said Croft, "in three or four days more the box would have gone home with one of your guests."

"Croft," said Sir James as he laid his hand on the man's shoulder, "you must know the thief?"

"I do, Sir James."

"But don't tell me his name. I'll send him off with £50 in his pocket and not even read him a moral lecture."

"Right you are, Sir James," replied Croft as the ghost of a smile stole over his face, and he winked at himself.

County Names.

County names in the New England and middle Atlantic states are almost exclusively of English or Indian origin. In the border states of the south they are chiefly English, in the gulf states English and Indian, with French in Louisiana and traces of Spanish origin in Florida and Texas. In the Mississippi valley they are again of English and Indian origin, with some French names coming down from the Jesuit explorers. In the Rocky mountain states they are again English and Indian, with a larger proportion of the latter than elsewhere, and on the Pacific coast Spanish county names again crop out. Texas has a Deaf Smith county, about the only instance of a nickname having been fixed upon an important political division. A pretty fair history of the political and social influences at work in the early development of a state could be written from a study of county names.

Intoxicated Wasps.

Wasps have a great fondness for overripe fruit, especially pears, plums and sweet apples. The sugar of these fruits has a tendency to pass into a kind of alcohol in the ordinary process of rotting, and after imbibing large quantities of this liquid the wasps become outrageously intoxicated. They crawl away in the grass in a semisomnolent condition and remain till the effects have passed off, when they will go at it again. It is while in this condition that they do their worst stinging. A person receiving a sting from one of these intoxicated wasps will suffer severely from nerve poisoning for days.

Oxford Economy Gas Range

is built on an entirely new plan. It is designed to reduce the work of cooking to a minimum. The elevated oven does away with stooping, everything may be looked after, and all burners are visible and easily regulated from a standing position. The oven is a quick, even, economical baker.

The Oxford Economy Broiler is most conveniently located and heated with the regular oven burner.

All ranges are beautifully enamelled and nickelled, making them very easy to clean.

The Oxford Economy Range is so compact and skilfully planned that a large dinner may be cooked on it without inconvenience.

Women's Institute Meeting.

The Queensboro branch of the Women's Institute held their annual meeting last week. Miss Bell and Miss Moffat, the delegates, gave very instructive addresses, which were well received. Some addresses and music gave variety at the evening session. The following officers were elected: President, Miss C. Thompson; Vice-President, Mrs. G. Gray; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss F. Wiggins. A meeting is arranged at the home of Mrs. F. J. Thompson, on July 28th.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This remedy is certain to be needed in almost every home before the summer is over. It can always be depended upon even in the most severe and dangerous cases. It is especially valuable for summer disorders in children. It is pleasant to take and never fails to give prompt relief. Why not buy it now? It may save a life. For sale by all druggists.

Laid at Rest.

Many were present at the obsequies of the late Mrs. James Gillick, which took place yesterday afternoon. Services were held at St. Michael's Church, conducted by Rev. Father Hanley, who also officiated at the grave. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The bearers were Messrs. J. Hanley, W. A. G. Hardy, L. Hughes, J. Lynch, L. Lalonde and C. J. Peppin.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Two New Pastors Preach Initial Sermons.

Notes of Yesterday's Services in Other Churches.

Bridge Street.

Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., the newly-appointed pastor of Bridge St. Methodist Church yesterday occupied the pulpit and created a most favorable impression with the large congregations which assembled. At the morning service before the Rev. gentleman announced his text he referred to his coming amongst them. It was in accordance with the itenerancy of the church that pastors were removed from one place to another. Whilst he was a stranger to the people he was no stranger in the city, as he had gone to school here and also lived here for some time with his parents. He desired to become acquainted as soon as possible with all and hoped that his ministration amongst them would be both pleasant and profitable. He realized that he was following a strong preacher in the person of their former pastor. He took for his text the 9th and 10th verses of the 6th chapter of Galatians. The subject was "Work."

"And let us not be weary in well doing for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially those who are of the household of faith."

These words were spoken by the Apostle Paul to the Galatians who were a people possessed somewhat of the characteristic of the Frenchmen of to-day. They had become restless and to some extent rebellious. The Apostle went amongst them for the purpose of endeavoring to increase their ardor and enthusiasm. They were weary in well doing, and many to-day were the same. How much of Christian work seems to be monotonous, and the workers grow weary. The grand climax in religion is to keep right on working faithfully for God, for in due season we shall reap our reward. We need grace to do the work, but this has been promised us. Many there are who grow weary in well doing because they consider their work is unappreciated. The Lord once became weary in His work, but He preserved and came off more than conqueror. So shall we if we keep on. If we sow in the seed time we shall surely reap in the harvest time. All Christian work means growth. We must be patient and wait for results, which are sure to follow, as in the spiritual harvest there are no failures if we faint not. There is a definite promise of Almighty God that His work shall not return void, but accomplish that for which it was intended. The Rev. gentleman made an earnest appeal for a united effort of preacher and congregation to work for the salvation of the unsaved. Their work would be crowned by God with success and an abundant harvest result if they were but faithful and faint not.

During the service an anthem was sung entitled "Hossana," Miss M. Vermilyea taking the solo. Mr. D. A. Cameron sang a solo entitled "The Plains of Peace."

Holloway Street.

Good congregations were present at both services yesterday, and the Rev. R. H. Leitch occupied the pulpit as the newly appointed pastor. Both discourses were much appreciated. At the morning service the Rev. gentleman was introduced to the congregation by Prof. Osborne, who referred in a complimentary manner to his work as a preacher. Mr. Leitch before announcing his text spoke in reference to his advent amongst them and hoped his pastorate would result in good. In the evening his subject was "The Gospel Warfare." The text was from 1st Timothy, 6th chapter and part of the 12th verse:

"Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life."

The Christian warrior has been supplied by God with all the necessary armor to fight the good fight of faith. Harmony is all that is needed to make the warfare successful. We have a wily enemy to contend against, but with God on our side and faith we shall conquer. All should be good obedient soldiers, fully equipped with the armor God has provided. We will have a strife to let the Gospel in our hearts, and we will have a strife to keep it. The various church organizations were for the purpose of assisting all in the fight. The Sunday Schools and the Epworth Leagues of the church were recruiting stations. Here the young are trained for the Gospel warfare. Victory is assured in this warfare, for Christ must reign. If we are but faithful unto death we will reign with him in glory. Our lives should be dedicated to the services of the Captain of our salvation.

During the service a solo entitled "A Wonderful Saviour He Is," was sung by Mr. H. Wrightmyer.

St. Andrew's.

Rev. Dr. McNair, of Oakville, preached at both services yesterday and his discourses were much appreciated. In the evening his text was from St. John, 1st chapter and latter part of 46th verse: "Come and See."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

The service yesterday morning was patriotic in its character, having especial reference to the National holiday. Rev. W. J. Gilliland preached, his text being from the 33rd psalm and 12th verse:

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance. The choir sang "Rule Britannia" during the offertory.

Christian Science.

When we begin to realize that God is our life, as our lesson explained it yesterday, everything begins to wear a brighter aspect, as in the golden text of the lesson in John 1, 2.25. This is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. And in John 3, 15. That whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.

John Street Church

The pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, preached at both services yesterday. In the evening his subject was "The Nation's Teachers." The text was from the Epistle of James, 5th chapter and 10th verse: "Take my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord for an example of suffering affliction and of patience."

At the morning service, Miss Pearl Fanning sang a solo entitled "Happy Day."

Frightened by An Automobile.

Yesterday afternoon whilst driving on Bleecker Avenue, the publisher of this paper and Mrs. C. J. Bowell met with a serious accident. Their horse became frightened at an automobile and ran away. Mrs. Bowell sustained injuries to the head and body and Mr. Bowell was severely bruised. Their vehicle was damaged and the horse hurt. The manipulator of the automobile did all in his power to avert the accident.

OBITUARY.

MRS. S. E. BALIS.

Mr. J. C. Balis, teacher at the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb here, has been called upon to mourn the demise of a loving mother within the last week, and the heartfelt sympathy of his co-workers and many friends in Belleville and elsewhere is unreservedly his. His mother, Mrs. S. E. Balis lived in Milwaukee. On Monday, the 27th of June, while seated on a Third Street car in that city, she became unconscious, in which condition she remained until the last summons came on the morning of July 2nd, notwithstanding the efforts of the best medical skill to be obtained. Mrs. Balis, until recently, enjoyed excellent health, and in spite of her 85 years was extremely active, attending to household duties and spending much of her time out of doors. She was deservedly esteemed for her many good qualities of head and heart, by a large number of friends in the city, where she resided for so long a time. Mr. Balis was at her bedside when she died, but she gave no sign that she recognized him or other relatives. Her husband predeceased her a number of years ago. Mrs. Balis was a good mother and Mr. Balis a dutiful and helpful son. Mrs. Balis was widely known in Wisconsin, having had as pupils in her private school some of the most prominent people of Milwaukee and other cities in the State.

MRS. M. TAYLOR.

Mrs. Mary Taylor, who resided at Rossmore, died on Saturday, aged 74 years. She had been ill for some time and was afflicted with blindness. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church. A husband and two sons survive.

MRS. REBECCA H. POMEROY.

An aged lady in the person of Mrs. Rebecca H. Pomeroy, widow of the late Mr. Henry Pomeroy, passed away at an early hour on Sunday morning at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Thos. Kelso, George street. Deceased was in her 87th year, having been born at Colborne in the year 1818. Mrs. Pomeroy had been a resident of Belleville for about 12 years. Old age was the cause of death. She was a member of the Anglican church, and a devout Christian lady, esteemed by all who knew her. Her husband preceded her to the grave a few years ago. The remaining members of the family are Mrs. Thos. Kelso, of this city, and Mrs. L. Grant, of Montreal. The remains will be taken to Colborne for interment.

AN INSPIRING SERVICE.

BRIDGE STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL WELCOMES THE NEW PASTOR.

That Bridge Street Sunday School never does things by halves was again proven yesterday afternoon by the observance of Dominion Day, and the welcome accorded to the Rev. James P. Wilson and family. Songs of praise to God and thanksgivings in concert for Canada and the British Empire, the singing of the Maple Leaf, Rule Britannia and the National Anthem, Miss Mabel Vermilyea taking the solo in the Maple Leaf and Mr. Stephen Burrows in Rule Britannia, and the Superintendents contrast between Canada and the countries he had recently visited, made up as patriotic a half hour as could be imagined.

Then the welcome to the new pastor was equally as spontaneous and enthusiastic. All the officers and teachers came to the platform and on behalf of the school bid the Rev. Mr. Wilson and his wife a hearty welcome and pledged themselves to aid him. Mrs. Wilson was presented with a handsome bouquet.

CLAIRVOYANT GUESSED RIGHT.

Letter in Pocket of Hamiltonian Drowned at Soo Predicted Death.

Sault Ste. Marie, July 4.—The body of a man, identified by papers found on him as Joseph H. Edwards, formerly of Hamilton, Ont., was found in the power canal yesterday. It had been in the water for some days.

Edwards, who was employed in one of the mills, had been missing from his boarding house for nearly a week. Among letters found was one from his wife in Hamilton appealing to him to return to the assistance of her and their young child.

The letter also said that the woman had visited a clairvoyant, who had told her that her husband would be dead within eight months. The letter was dated June 10.

Fell Under Moving Train.

East Toronto, July 4.—The sad death of William O'Connor at the Emergency Hospital yesterday morning has cast a gloom over the town. O'Connor was employed as a brakesman on the G.T.R., and in this capacity was employed largely on the transfer freight between East Toronto and the city. At 8 o'clock Saturday night, while the transfer freight was backing over the crossing at Bathurst street, O'Connor, while stooping over to pick up his lantern, fell forward across the rails, one car passing over his legs above the knee. The ambulance was summoned and O'Connor taken to the Emergency Hospital, but never rallied from the shock, dying shortly after 2 o'clock. O'Connor was the only support of a widowed mother.

Just Escaped Death.

Toronto, July 4.—Bert Walton, in a new and risky feat of the "leap the gap" order, invented by himself, nearly came to his death on Saturday during one of his trial trips. He was in a convulsion for 25 minutes as a result of the spill, but, though badly shaken up, he thinks he will be able to try it again ere long. The police razed his bicycle slide, but he says he will build a new one when he gets out of the hospital.

Almost a Fatality.

London, July 4.—In stepping off a street car, Rev. Mr. Rawlings of the King street Presbyterian Church was knocked down by another coming in the opposite direction. His escape was miraculous, he receiving only a cut on the head and a severe shaking up.

THE JAPS SUCCESSFUL

Occupied Heights Within Ten Miles of Port Arthur.

Two Divisions of 40,000 Men and An Artillery Corps Made the Attack—Hundreds of Russian Wounded Arriving at Che Foo—Russian Report Says Japanese Lost 8,000 Men, and That They Are Withdrawing From Positions Won.

Che Foo, July 4.—It has been learned here that a big battle has been fought on land near Port Arthur on June 26 and June 27. The Japanese were successful, and on the morning of the 28th they occupied certain heights within ten miles of Port Arthur. The first Japanese division, which suffered so heavily at the battle of Nanshan Hill, and the eleventh division, fresh from Japan, were engaged. The Japanese losses have not been learned, but the Russians are said to have suffered very heavily.

Hundreds of Wounded.

Refugees who left Port Arthur Saturday, and who have arrived here, declared that wounded Russians were being brought in by the hundreds.

The two divisions which attacked Port Arthur were composed of forty thousand men and an independent artillery corps.

Did Japs Lose 8,000?

St. Petersburg, July 4.—Russian feeling has greatly improved over the reports of Russian success at Dalin and in Major-General Mistchenko's engagement. Japanese losses during the fighting of June 26 and 27 are stated at 8,000 men and in Mistchenko's operations at 500. Prisoners say that the Japanese are running short of provisions, and that for two days they had practically nothing to eat. ...

Telegrams from Liaoyang agree that the Japanese are withdrawing from the positions recently captured at such enormous cost, and that the Russian troops are assuming the offensive and inflicting further losses.

Credit for the Japanese retreat is ascribed to General Kuropatkin, and the remainder of the campaign, it is believed, will be directly favorable to the Russian arms.

Land Battle Expected.

Che Foo, July 4.—A small Japanese force occupied Kaiping on June 23 and found the Russians had fallen back to Taitcdekiao, where the Japanese expect that a big battle will be fought.

SHIPS THAT PASSED.

Japs Chased Vladivostock Squadron But It Extinguished Lights and Vanished.

Tokio, July 4.—The Vladivostock squadron eluded Vice-Admiral Kamimura's squadron eastward of the Island of Tsu Friday night in the darkness. A drizzling rain and fog favored the Russian vessels.

The two squadrons met early in the evening, the Russians being north of Iki Island, and the Japanese south of Tsu Island. They were then ten miles apart. The Russians bolted to the northwest, when they were discovered by Vice-Admiral Kamimura. The latter chased them at full speed.

The Japanese torpedo boats steamed ahead and entered within the range of the Russian guns. The Russian vessels vigorously shelled the Japanese torpedo boats. This firing explains the cannonading heard on Tsu Island and gave rise to the belief that a general engagement was in progress.

Vice-Admiral Kamimura gained on the Russian ships and was only five miles in the rear, when suddenly at 9 p.m. all the Russian vessels extinguished their lights and disappeared in the darkness. At that time the Japanese torpedo boats were pressing the Russians, who had been using their searchlights.

The torpedo boats failed to get close enough to the Russian squadron to discharge torpedoes.

DESPERATE TORPEDO ATTACK.

Japs Sunk Russian Guardship and Torpedo Boat Destroyer June 27.

Tokio, July 4.—A belated report from Admiral Togo records a desperate and successful torpedo attack at the entrance of Port Arthur last Monday night, June 27, in which a Russian guardship and a Russian torpedo boat destroyer were sunk.

The guardship is described as having two masts and three funnels. She was either a battleship or a cruiser and she was torpedoed and destroyed. The torpedo boat destroyer was struck and then blew up and sank.

Admiral Togo reports the loss of one officer and 13 killed and one officer and two men wounded. He makes no mention of damage to his fleet.

Saw the Vessels Sink.

The 12th torpedo fleet, under the command of Commander Yamada, delivered the attack. The Japanese vessels were revealed by the Russian searchlights and the shore forts opened a heavy fusillade on them. The Russian guardship was surrounded and attacked by the Japanese, who saw this vessel sink amid huge volumes of water thrown up by heavy explosions. Following this the Russian torpedo boat destroyer at once attacked the Japanese vessels, which responded to the onslaught. A Russian destroyer while within the area lit up by the searchlights was seen to explode, rise, fall back into the water sideways and sink.

The guardship sank near the base of Golden Hill.

CANADIANS ARE FITTED

Government Chief Engineer Recommends Them to the G.T.P.

Grand Trunk Pacific's Contention That There Are No Competent Engineers For Survey Work in Canada Exploded—Mr. Stephens Did Not Apply to Mr. Schreiber to Recommend Men For the Work—Latter Named Many Capable Men.

Ottawa, July 4.—The contention of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company that there were no Canadian engineers competent or available for the survey work in western Canada for which Americans are drawing salaries up in the thousands, was exploded in the sitting of Judge Winchester's investigation court on Saturday. H. M. Mowat, K.C., appeared for the Government, and Andrew Haydon watched the proceedings for the Grand Trunk Company.

Collingwood Schreiber, C. M. G., chief engineer of Government railways, was first examined. His engineering experience dated back to 1852. Mr. Stephens had never applied to him to recommend men. There were many perfectly competent for the work, and, he presmued, willing to do it.

Judge Winchester asked if the witness knew of any Canadian engineers capable of filling the position of chief engineer. Mr. Schreiber, in reply, mentioned Newton Ker, city engineer of Ottawa; Hugh Lumsden of Toronto, George Keefer of Victoria, H. A. F. MacLeod and Mr. G. A. Mountain.

"Do you know of any Canadians available and capable for divisional engineers?" was asked.

Mr. Schreiber, from a list handed him, mentioned favorably, H. P. Bell, C. E. Perry, A. Leonard, J. H. Kennedy, J. St. V. Caddy, A. Duffy, J. Brophy, J. Dickey, W. McCarthy and T. Ruel. He had recommended many of these to the Grand Trunk people.

"When was that?" asked the judge.

"In 1902."

The judge enquired if there were Canadians suitable for hydrographical engineering.

Mr. Schreiber replied that engineers who had worked on the Canadian canals were perfectly competent to do the work.

H. A. F. MacLeod gave evidence along the same lines and from a list of members of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers cited names of many qualified for the work.

T. C. Keefer, C. M. G., told the court that he would not anticipate any difficulty in obtaining engineers of Canadian nationality at the rates being paid.

Henry Holgate, C. E., of Montreal, did not think Mr. Stephens could have made any earnest enquiry as to the engineering force available. He had never heard of Mr. Stephens communicating with the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers in regard to ascertaining the names of available engineers.

HERZL DEAD.

He Was Founder of Movement For Jewish State in Palestine.

Vienna, July 4.—Dr. Theodore Herzl, president of the Zionist Congress, died here yesterday.

Dr. Herzl was born at Buda-Pesth on May 2, 1860, and after obtaining the degree of doctor of laws from the university of that city, traveled extensively throughout Europe and Asia Minor. Between 1885 and 1897 he published a number of comedies and volumes of essays and light sketches, but gradually became attracted to the position of the Jews in Central and Eastern Europe. The development of Anti-Semitism in these countries and the grave issues involved prompted him to become the founder of the Zionist movement, in which he had the warm support of Max Nordau in Paris and Israel Zangwill in England. That organization aimed at the establishment of a Jewish State in Palestine, either in Palestine, if that were possible, or, if not, in Cyprus, but little practical headway has been made.

MAD MULLAH ON WARPATH.

Has 6,000 Followers, One-Third Armed With Rifles.

Aden, July 4.—The so-called mad Mullah of British Somaliland is again on the warpath.

He is encamped south of Nogal with 6,000 followers, 2,000 of whom are armed with rifles, and has large supplies of ammunition and transport.

Some of the tribes hitherto friendly to the British are reported to have joined the Mullah since the British forces were withdrawn from the country.

Nearly Asphyxiated.

Quebec, July 4.—M. P. Davis, the prominent contractor, narrowly escaped death by asphyxiation at his home in New Liverpool at an early hour Saturday morning. For a time his recovery was in absolute doubt. The accident was caused by smoke and gas escaping from the furnace.

What Meaneth This?

Montreal, July 4.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. W. S. Fielding arrived here at noon yesterday, and, after interviewing General Manager Hays and Mr. Morse, the Premier and Finance Minister returned to the capital last evening by special train.

Mrs. John Tolmie Dead.

Bracebridge, July 4.—Mrs. John Tolmie, wife of John Tolmie of Kincardine, member in the House of Commons for West Bruce, died at the home of her mother, Mrs. Robertson, here at 1 p.m. yesterday, after a long illness.

THE FOURTH OF JULY

U.S. NATIONAL HOLIDAY FURNISHES TEXT FOR A SERMON.

OF UNIVERSAL APPLICATION

The Modest Hero—"The Stone Which the Builders Rejected, the Same Is Become the Head of the Corner"—Story of Heroism and Self-Sacrifice the Theme of Rev. Dr. Talmage's Patriotic Jubilee Talk.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 3.—At this season of patriotic jubilee, when the great ones of our nation's history are recalled, the preacher chooses for his theme the career of Marcus Whitman, through whose heroism and self-sacrifice the great Empire of the northwest was added to our national domain. The text is Matthew xxi., 42, "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner."

Every Fourth of July it is the custom of patriotic speakers to eulogize the names of George Washington and Samuel Adams and James Otis and Joseph Warren and Patrick Henry and De Witt Clinton and John Adams and John Hancock and Robert Morris and Benjamin Franklin and John Witherspoon and Thomas Jefferson and Nathaniel Greene and Alexander Hamilton and John Jay. These were the mental giants who hewed out of the new world's quarries the titanic stones which became the foundation layers of our national Government. But these were not the only men in those early days of our national history to whom we, as a people, are indebted.

To-morrow we shall celebrate our national holiday. Let me present to you to-day a name that ought to be familiar to us all, but which is seldom placed in the rank it ought to have on the roll of the nation's heroes. While we honor the men who cleared away the debris and dug out the foundation stones of our national capital let us spare, too, a few words of praise for a man to whose daring and perseverance it is due that at least one if not several stars were added to those that glitter on our national flag. I place my wreath of immortelles to-day on the grave of Marcus Whitman, who practically single-handed, saved the States of Oregon and Washington to the Union. I praise the Marcus Whitman of 1842, who placed the despised capstone of Oregon upon the topmost pinnacle of the Washington legislative halls, made up of the stone of many States.

How did Marcus Whitman save Oregon to the United States? First, by heeding the Macedonian gospel cry of helplessness. Like the pilgrim fathers he obeyed the direct summons which came to him in the voice of many thunderings to carry Christ's message of salvation even unto the uttermost parts of the earth. He left his home among the beautiful hills of central New York State, not out of a spirit of adventure as a Chanler Astor might plunge into the African jungles to hunt big game. He left it not as did John McLaughlin to dangle before the avaricious eyes of North American Indians his prizes, which would make the red-skinned hunters more expert in setting their traps and bringing in their piles of furs. He left it not as did the English gentlemen who came to Jamestown, Va., in the hope of becoming land-owning aristocrats in a new world, or as did the Spanish marauders, who, in their conquest of Mexico, stole upon the land what the pirates of old used to steal upon the seas. But Marcus Whitman and Samuel Parker dared cross the American continent because from the far-off Willamette Valley came the story of the bitter need there was for the gospel of peace to be preached to the Indian war chiefs, with scalping knives and tomahawks at belts, who, by their actions, said: "We need the white man's book of heaven. We need the white man's Christ."

To describe how that Macedonian cry of helplessness came to Marcus Whitman, let me transplant you in imagination, back to the little frontier town of St. Louis, Mo., and, like the shadow on the dial of Ahaz, turn back time until the year of 1832. St. Louis at that time had a population of only a few thousand. There the gambling dens and the dance halls and the low variety shows were in full blast. There were collected many of the dissolute characters, which, always as Satanic emissaries, infest every frontier town with a leprous, immoral infection. We will suppose, in order to make the wild, weird scene we are about to describe more vivid, that the old Indian fighter and territorial Governor, up to 1821, and the United States superintendent of the Indians, from 1821 to 1838, General William Clark, is spending a social evening with two of his old friends, who followed Lewis and himself on their famous journey of the far northwest. Suddenly a messenger raps at the door. In answer to the gruff call, "Come in," there enter four Flathead Indians. Two of them are aged warriors, two young stalwart braves. "Where are you from, my men?" asked the general, eying them from head to foot. "From the murmuring waters of the Columbia? Impossible. From the Pacific shores? Nay, nay, that cannot be. For what did you come? For the white man's book of heaven? What, didst thou have to travel 3,000 miles to hunt up the white man's book of heaven when the representatives of the Hudson Bay Company have for years been buying your furs?" "Yes," answered the Nez Perces Indians. "We have come 3,000 miles for the white man's book of heaven. Will you give it us?" But though the three wise men, coming to seek the new-born king in the Jerusalem capital, never made more stir than did the four Flathead Indians coming to find the white man's Christ in the Missouri frontier town of 1832, yet even there in that St. Louis frontier town they could not find the white man's book of heaven.

Let me now read to you the strangest valedictory ever given at any place. The two older Indians who came on this mission of seeking the white man's God had died. When the two younger braves were about to depart for their own faraway wigwams, one of them in Indian eloquence spake these words, which were published in the little frontier paper of that time: "I came to you over the trail of many moons from the setting sun. You were the friends of my fathers, who have all gone the long way. I came with an eye partly opened for more light for my people, who sit in darkness. I go back with both eyes closed. How can I go back blind to my blind people who sit in darkness? I made my way to you with strong arms through many enemies and strange lands that I might carry back much to them. I go back with both arms broken and empty. Two fathers came with us. They were braves of many winters and wars. We leave them asleep by your great water and wigwam. They were tried in many moons, and their moccasins wore out. My people sent me to get the white man's book of heaven. You took me where you allow your women to dance as we do not ours, and the book was not there. You took me where they worship the Great Spirit with candles, and the book was not there. You showed me the images of the Good Spirit and pictures of the good land beyond, but the book was not among them to tell us the way. I am going back the long sad trail to my people of the dark land. You make my feet heavy with gifts, and my moccasins will grow old in carrying them, yet the book is not among them. When I tell my poor blind people after one more moon in the big council that I did not bring the book no word will be spoken by our old men or by our young braves. One by one they will rise up and go out in silence. My people will die in the darkness, and they will go on the long path to other hunting grounds. No white man will go with them and no white man's book to make the way plain. I have no more words."

It was the publication of these words, copied in the eastern papers, that made Marcus Whitman heed the call of the Nez Perces Indians; it was the publication of these words that nerved Whitman to consecrate all his life to giving the Flathead Indians the white man's "Book of Life." It was that resolve to go in the name of Christ to the far northwest which made it possible for Marcus Whitman to save Oregon to the Union

But Marcus Whitman was a statesman as well as a humble gospel missionary. Like Livingstone in Africa, he saw how much could be done in that land by the resources of civilization. His prophetic gaze traveled on through the centuries, and he longed to have that fair region under Christian influences and prospering under the white man's skill and industry. He could hear the tramp of the oncoming generations, as well as the creaking of his cart wheels by his side. Therefore, when Marcus Whitman, on the famous Fourth of July, 1836, with his young bride, spread the blankets upon the top of the Rocky Mountains, with Mount Hood and Mount Jefferson standing afar off as guarding sentinels, and dedicated that western soil of God and his native land, like Paul, he was surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses.

He dedicated this western soil in spite of the fact that all could be said to discourage settlers had been said in calumnious disparagement. The Hudson Bay Company wanted it left in the undisturbed possession of the wild animals whose skins they were turning into gold. They wanted it for a perpetual hunting ground. Therefore they declared it to be a land barred by impassable ranges of mountains, a land of undrainable morasses, pestilential and malarial, unfit for the residence of white men, a land given up to barbarism and Indian savagery. So persistent were the falsehoods disseminated by these greedy, selfish capitalists that before Marcus Whitman's advent Oregon had been lying like the capstone of the Jerusalem temple which the builders rejected, but which afterward became the chief of the corner. All the national statesmen, both trans and cis-Atlantic, cared no more for it than a pearl diver would care to carry around with him a cobblestone, or a diamond merchant would care to preserve an ordinary pebble among his precious jewels. Yet Marcus Whitman at once knew Oregon was the strategic geographical key to the Northwest. He said: "It must be ours. It must be ours on account of its future generations. It must belong to the United States as well as to God."

Why, so useless was this Oregon region considered in 1842 that Daniel Webster, then premier of President Tyler's Cabinet, was willing to barter off to Lord Ashburton the whole of the Far Northwest for a few privileges for the American sailors to fish for cod off the Banks of Newfoundland. A few years before this, to prove his utter ignorance of the intrinsic value of this land of the Northwest, Daniel Webster, then the most powerful member of the United States Senate, uncontroverted by Clay and Calhoun and Benton, made this astounding speech: "What do we want with this vast, worthless area, this region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, of shifting sands and whirlwinds of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put these great deserts, or these great mountain ranges, impenetrable and covered to their base with eternal snows? What can we ever hope to do with the western coast of 3,000 miles, rock bound, cheerless and uninteresting, and not a harbor on it? What use have we for such a country? Mr. President, I will never vote a cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific Coast one inch nearer Boston than it is now."

But Marcus Whitman had more than inspired vision and opened ears. He had a consecrated tian heart, as well as a He was a gospel mission ready, if necessary, to death he could only acco work which God had gi do. In order to save Oreg Union, in midwinter, alon straight across this contin defied the warning element as savage tribes, the terror snows and the precipices a as well as the Indian tomaha

But, as I take a step furthe my study of this remarkable na builder, I find, as with Marcus Wh man, the greatest of men are alway the gentlest of mer. Furthermore, find that the seemingly unimportant incidents of their lives, which they did out of the pureness and nobility of their hearts, have sometimes had the most far reaching effects in their ultimate triumphs.

Not only do we admire Marcus Whitman as a patriot and a hero, but as a remarkable fact that his public success was in no small degree due to the qualities he displayed in his private life. Do you ask how the one could contribute to the other? I answer by rapidly drawing three verbal pictures. Scene the first: We are now standing in the little village church of Prattsburg, in the central part of New York State. It is in the winter of 1836; February is the month. A rather short, heavily built man of reddish hair and beard, with determination marked upon every lineament of his face, is the bridegroom. Dr. Marcus Whitman is his name. A sweet faced young lady, Narcissa Prentiss, daughter of Judge Prentiss, is the bride. In the presence of their village friends the young couple become one. The congratulations are spoken. The words of farewell are now said. The bride and groom turn their faces west and the long bridal trip of 3,000 miles commenced.

Scene the second: We are now at the frontier station of Fort Laramie, of the Platte River. The little caravan of transcontinental travelers are here told that they must unload their wagons and strap all their goods upon pack mules and horses. No wagon had ever yet crossed the mountains, and no wagon could. Up to this year no white woman had ever crossed the continent. There were two brides in that party. The one was the young wife of Marcus Whitman; the other was the bride of his missionary associate, Rev. Samuel Parker by name. "I tell you that wagon cannot go through," I hear one of the rough members of the caravan say. I now see a set look upon the face of Dr. Whitman. His jaws snap shut with the grip of a steel trap. Then a glint comes into his eye as he says: "But I tell you that wagon will go through. These ladies, my wife and Mrs. Parker, must not be compelled to ride horseback all that way." A muttered oath comes from the lips of the rough man at the fort as he says: "All right. We will try to pull it through." And pull and push and lift that wagon through those men did. They dragged it over the mountains and across the prairies to lighten the journey of two young women who as brides accompanied their husbands to faroff missionary fields.

Scene the third: It is the year 1843. We are now standing in the White House of our national capital. The president of the United States is John Tyler. He is smooth faced, tall and spare of frame. The second member of this notable group has a huge, massive bo , a leonine face. He is one with looks expressive of the description given by a famous English jurist: "He is the most magnificent physical as well as mental specimen of his day and generation." He is the questioner. He is Daniel Webster. The third member of the group looks like a rough mountaineer. He is clad in skins. His hair is uncut. But he is one of the immortals of his day. He is Marcus Whitman.

As we stand in the corner of the room I see a strange scene. Tyler and Webster, the two leaders of the American Government are being driven back and back from their old positions of statecraft by this seemingly untutored man of the backwoods. Then, like Paul before Agrippa, I see Marcus Whitman step forward, and hear him say: "Mr. Secretary, you know not what you are doing. Better, far better, barter away all the wealth and the sovereignty of the New England states for a few Newfoundland cod, than surrender to England the priceless treasures of Oregon and the strategic position of the Far Northwest."

"Bah," answered Daniel Webster with scorn, "what is the use of Oregon to the Union? That land is wholly inaccessible. A wagon road could never be built across those mountains." Then, as Richelieu turned upon his king, I see Whitman turn, and hear him triumphantly say: "Mr. Secretary, that is a grand mistake that has been made by listening to interested persons. Six years ago I was told that there was no wagon road to Oregon, and it was impossible to take a wagon there, and yet, in spite of pleadings and almost threat, I took a wagon over that road, and have it now." "Is that so?" said Webster. "Then Oregon must be saved to the Union." And so I find in these few words that the devotion which Marcus Whitman gave to his wife by compelling the men to carry his wagon over the Rockey Mountains was one of the mighty means of helping to save Oregon to the Union. It proved that the Far Northwest and the east were not separated by impassable barriers. And it furthermore proved that all men's greatest and truest successes are always dependent upon their faithfulness in the common duties of ordinary life. Marcus Whitman's love for his country is today associated with the pure love which he bore Narcissa Prentiss. The true successes by which we will be able perhaps to do some great act for our country will be dependent upon how we fulfill the little duties of everyday domestic existence.

Czar Donates $50,000.

St. Petersburg, July 5.—Emperor Nicholas has personally donated $50,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the tornado at Moscow.

Guelph, July 5.—The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have purchased the property of the Guelph Biscuit and Confectionery Company on Cardigan street. The price paid was $3,000. The C.P.R. will tear down the factory building and clear the property for yard accommodation. The residence of Mrs. Harvey, just south of the biscuit works, has also been sold to the C.P.R., and it is understood that the price is $3,000. The railway company are in possession of the Cowan property, and have options on other property in that vicinity. The Board of Railway Commissioners have approved of the plans for the Guelph and Goderich extension.

Wind Raised the Roof.

New Hamburg, July 5.—Between 5 and 6 p. m. yesterday a thunderstorm, accompanied by a severe hurricane, passed over the village, damaging several buildings slightly, besides uprooting twenty or twenty-five large trees. It took the roof completely off the King Edward Hotel, a large, new three-storey brick building, near the Grand Trunk Station. The roof fell upon the sheds and windmill, causing a total wreck and a loss of over $800. It is owned and occupied by Jacob Becker.

Still a Mystery.

Sault Ste. Marie, July 5.—At the inquest into the death of James H. Williams, Hamilton, held last night, the evidence adduced by witnesses and the post-mortem examination still leaves the cause of drowning a mystery. The post-mortem examination shows no signs of violence. Witnesses testified to his having money to the extent of about $20 on his person on the evening of Saturday, June 25, and he has been missing since that date.

VLADIVOSTOCK FLEET HAS RETURNED INTO PORT.

Has Russia Offered to Surrender Port Arthur ?

Improbable Story that a Proposition Has Been Made Through France to Hand Over Fortress With Ships and Arms, Providing the Garrison Is Freed—Russians Accused of Great Cruelty to Japanese Soldiers.

St. Petersburg, July 5.—The Vladivostock squadron is understood to have returned safe to port.

Offer to Surrender.

Tokio, July 5.—It is reported that Russia has through France offered to surrender Port Arthur to Japan, together with its ships and arms, providing the garrison is freed. A confirmation of the report is impossible and it is generally regarded to be untrue.

Accuses Russians.

Tokio, July 5.—Gen. Oku makes the following charges: That on June 15 Japanese scouts were overpowered by Russian troops, who ran bayonets in their mouths, in their heads and cut their breasts open, that on June 27 the Russians captured a Japanese cavalryman, whom they bayoneted and then cut his abdomen open; on May 15 the Russians beheaded a Japanese cavalryman whom they captured.

Twelve Miles Apart.

St. Petersburg, July 5.—The latest despatches from the seat of war are to the effect that Gen. Kuropatkin is still at Tatchekiao and that the Japanese forces are stationary at Senucheng and along the roads from Siuyen to Haicheng, Tatchekiao and Kaichou, but they are maintaining their advance from Fengwangcheng over the direct main roads to Liaoyang, where the effect of the rains is less appreciable. There are only 12 miles between them.

BRITAIN WILL WAIT.

Till Prize Court Passes on the Vessel Allanton.

London, July 5.—In the House of Commons yesterday, Earl Percy, the under Foreign Secretary, announced that the British gunboat Espiegle has been ordered to return to Newchwang and watch over the interests of British subjects.

The Secretary also said that as the owners of the British steamer Allanton, captured by the Russian Vladivostock squadron, were appealing to the supreme prize court at St. Petersburg against the confiscation of the Vladivostock court, the British Government intended to await the decision of that tribunal before approaching the Russian Government on the subject.

HARRY HOBBS GOES FREE.

Pleaded Not Guilty on Being Charged With Bank Theft and Bank Failed to Put Up Evidence.

Woodstock, July 5.—In the police court yesterday forenoon Harry H. Hobbs, the Ingersoll bank teller, who was arrested last week, received his trial on the charge of stealing the sum of $729.31 from the Merchants Bank. He pleaded not guilty to the charge and the prosecution not offering any evidence against him he was discharged.

The prosecution was represented by Thomas Wells, the solicitor for the Merchants Bank, and upon the plea of the accused being received he informed the magistrate that the prosecutor did not propose offering any evidence in support of the charge. "The case is entirely in the hands of your worship," he added.

This statement left but one course for the magistrate to follow, and he discharged Hobbs. The latter expressed his thanks to the magistrtae, and immediately left for his home in Ingersoll.

Crown Attorney Not Satisfied.

Crown Attorney R. N. Ball, who was present in the interests of the Crown, is not at all satisfied with the course adopted in the case by the bank authorities. He considers that such action seriously interferes with the working of the criminal code and he proposes to call the attention of the Attorney-General to the matter.

He understands that friends of the young man have adjusted the difficulty between the accused and the bank, and thus the arrest was merely the means of bringing these friends to his assistance.

Such a procedure does not meet the approval of the Crown Attorney and more may yet be heard of the matter.

The costs of the arrest and of the court were paid by Mr. Wells on behalf of the bank.

Section Man Killed.

Hamilton, July 5.—A section man named Popplewell was instantly killed on the G.T.R. near Burlington yesterday morning. He and a companion named Henry Wilson were putting gravel on the ties. They stepped off one track out of the way of an approaching freight train on to another track in front of a passenger train. Wilson escaped with an injured back and was brought to the city hospital here.

Cut His Throat.

Leamington, July 5.—John Veter, a respected farmer residing on the 6th concession, Mersea, committed suicide by cutting his throat yesterday morning. The act was no doubt premeditated, as he attempted to poison himself about a week ago by drinking a quantity of turpentine which was in the house.

Allowed to Go.

St. Thomas, July 5.—Mrs. Blancha Smith pleaded guilty to forgery yesterday morning in the police court, but was released on suspended sentence.

The C.N.R.'s Trump Card.

Toronto, July 5.—The Canadian Northern Railway have given notice that they wish to expropriate the land south of Front street, for which the G.T.R. and C.P.R. have been negotiating for a union station. The application is made under the terms of the Railway Act, by which it is claimed the C.N.R. will have priority. Under Section 138, lands may be taken without the consent of owner for right of way, which shall not exceed 100 feet in breadth, and for depots, stations and yards which shall exceed one mile in length by 500 feet in breadth.

Torontonian Drowned.

New York, July 5.—Edward R. Jackson of Toronto, was drowned while bathing at Manhattan Beach yesterday. He went into the surf with a number of friends and was seized with a cramp while swimming beyond the life lines. He became exhausted and went down before his friends could go to his assistance.

Drowned at Mille Roches.

Cornwall, July 5.—Yesterday at Mille Roches, little six-year-old Florence McFarlane, daughter of Wm. McFarlane, while playing along the canal, fell in and was drowned in fourteen feet of water. Her little brothers, who were with her, were unable to rescue her.

Hurricane Hit Toronto Island.

Toronto, July 5.—Last night a little hurricane struck the island, and caused campers and cottagers and the manager of the oval about $2,000 in damages. Fortunately no one was hurt, and there were no accidents to boats on the bay.

Conference Not in Vain.

London, July 5.—(C.A.P.)—Seven hundred delegates to the Pan-Presbyterian Conference and their wives were entertained by the local committee at the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool. The Lord Mayor was present. Rev. Principal Cavan, voicing the thanks of the delegates for the hospitality shown them, said that if the kindly feeling evinced in Liverpool in any sense symbolized the higher spiritual unity he loved to think of, then the Liverpool conference had not been in vain.

Reproved By General Booth.

London, July 5.—(C.A.P.)—The Canadian Salvationists sit together at the meetings of the Salvation Army in the Temple Strand, and when singing a hymn Sunday Gen. Booth, detecting that they sang in slightly different tune, instantly waved his hand to stop the band, and said to the Canadians: "We will sing it your way, when we come to your country; you must sing it with the band now."

Lost $96.

St. Catharines, July 5.—Jacob Honsberger, a farmer near Jordan, yesterday reported the loss of $96. He had $207 in a drawer at home. The thief left him $111 of it.

SCOTCH NAMES.

The Reason They Abound Among the Creek and Cherokee Indians.

The prevalence of Scotch names with the Creek and Cherokee Indians has at various times been the source of some comment. Although other nations, and in fact, nearly every nation, is represented by the names borne by these people, these Scotch names are far more numerous and have suffered less change than those acquired from any other nation. The names of some of these Scotch Indians are closely allied with the history of these two nations for the past 100 years, and for several generations such names as McIntosh, McKellop, McCombs, Adir, McQueen and McGillivary are registered on nearly all the treaties and official papers of moment to either nation. Men bearing these names today are among the foremost of the progressive Indians.

As was stated, the origin of these Scotch names dates back over 100 years. At that time the Creek and Cherokee Indians more especially bent their efforts toward building up a nation of physically perfect men. The women were encouraged to mate only with the strong, robust men of the tribe, and if a weak man withstood the taunts and gibes of his fellows and remained there was little chance of his securing a wife. In that way the life of these people was almost Spartan.

While this sentiment was at its height and the tribes were living in Georgia, some time before the Revolution, a regiment of Scotch highlanders was quartered in the vicinity of one of the principal villages of the nations. The Indian maidens looked with favor on the burly men of the north of Scotland, and a number of marriages was the result. When the regiment was ordered back to England or to some other quarter of the globe there were some of these Scotchmen who stayed behind, and their names have thus been fixed in the annals of the Creek nation. It is through the Creeks that the Cherokees acquired their Scotch names.

Britain's Share in Egypt.

In Lord Cromer's annual report of the finances and condition of Egypt and the Soudan an interesting point is made in connection with the railway contracts, of which Great Britain had the largest share. The principal British orders were for first-class carriages, electric lighting plant, and signalling appliances. As regards this latter order, Major Blakeney, the traffic manager, remarks: "It is, perhaps, worthy of note, while the present cry of British trade being on the decrease is so loud, that the firm which obtained the contract, and whose tender was the lowest and most suitable, was English, and that it has been enterprising enough to send a capable representative to study the requirements of the country. It is conceivable that if other British firms were to follow the same procedure their trade would not fall off, despite foreign competition."

Looking Pleasant.

Photographer—Now, sir, if you'll look a little less as though you had a bill to meet and a little more as though you'd just been left a legacy you'll be a picture.

Daily Intelligencer.

VOTERS' LISTS ANOTHER VIOLATION OF PRINCIPLE.

There does not appear to be any limit to the abnegation of all professed principle by the Liberal party in Canada. Every reader will remember the violent and unreasonable opposition given by that party to the Bill introduced into Parliament by the Conservative Government, providing for a Dominion franchise, and the declaration that, when they attained power they would repeal that law, and adopt the Provincial lists as the basis upon which Dominion representatives should be elected. That there might not be any doubt upon that point, the Liberals, in convention in 1903, adopted as planks in their platform the following declarations of principle, upon the question of the voters' lists:

1. The saving of expense to the Dominion treasury.
2. An annual revision of the lists.
3. Revision under revising barristers not appointed by the "Government of the day."
4. The acceptance of the Provincial franchise for Dominion elections.

This they carried out to a certain extent soon after attaining power in 1896, to which no objection was taken in the different provinces, so long as what are called Liberal Governments continued in power.

Manitoba changed its political complexion, and Grits, no longer able to manipulate the voters' lists, have changed their professed principles. In that province the Conservative Government established a provincial franchise. The Act provides for an annual revision. Its revising officers are appointed by the county court judges. This provision, it will be seen, removes the preparation of voters' lists from the manipulation of all political parties. "That any Liberals, after fighting for years for what a Conservative Government has given him," says a contemporary, "should object to the operation of such a law when it is admittedly administered 'with the utmost fairness and impartiality' by the Liberals themselves, almost passes comprehension." In Canada, however, no one can or will be surprised at any thing which Grits will do to retain power. Hence we now find Mr. Bole, the Liberal candidate in Winnipeg for a seat in the Dominion Parliament, now denouncing the very principle he and his party have been advocating for years. This gentleman, while admitting that the courts of revision were conducted with "the utmost fairness and impartiality," declares that "the Liberals object to "the principle of the whole proceedings — registration, Court of "Revision, and everything else connected with it. The action of the "local Government in preparing a "list for Dominion elections, at the "expense of the people of Manitoba, "is indefensible."

Why this sudden conversion? The answer is not difficult to find. The Grits are out of power in Manitoba, and have no longer the stuffing of the voters' lists, by which means they succeeded in retaining power so long.

CHANGE FOR THE WORSE.

Bishop W. C. Doane, who is to be chairman of the interchurch conference on marriage and divorce, used to know in Hartford a cooper called Uncle Josh.

Uncle Josh was a kind of Eben Holden. Everyone knew him. His quaint sayings were passed about in Hartford as, in London, the sayings of Whistler used to be passed about.

"Old George Silcox has jined the church," said Uncle Josh to Bishop Doane one morning. "He is a Methody on probation now."

"That is grateful news," said the clergyman, for George Silcox had the reputation of a miser and a rake. "That is grateful news, indeed. And do you notice much change in George, Uncle Josh?"

"Oh, considerable," said the other. "In the past, when he went out to mend his fences on Sunday, George carried his axe on his shoulder, but he carries it under his overcoat now."

A GOOD ANSWER.

"The late Mayor McLane," said a Baltimorean, "told me last year of an occurrence that had befallen a well-known railroad man.

"A humble employee of the road called on this man and asked for a pass to a certain distant point. The official said, with a severe air:

"'You have been working for us for some time, haven't you?'

"'Yes,' said the employee.

"'You have always been paid regularly?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Well, now, suppose you were working for a farmer. Would you have the nerve to ask this farmer to harness up his horses and drive you a long distance into the country?'

"'No,' said the employee, 'I wouldn't. But if the farmer had his horses already harnessed and was going my way, I'd call him a pretty mean fellow if he refused to give me a lift.'"

Literary Notes.

From the front-cover page, where smiles the prettiest of summer girls, to the last article in the advertising pages, The Designer for August is full of the breath of out-of-doors, as is befitting a number which is to be read during the most sultry month of the year. Those readers who have art aspirations will thoroughly enjoy the enticing description Lilian C. Paschal gives of "The Hampton Pines Art Colony," while others who run to rhyming will prefer "The Poetry of Rural Homes," by John De Morgan. "Scenes from Sunbonnet Land," by Harriette Wilbur, is the drollest and prettiest of picture plays for the wee tots, and older folks who are fond of amateur theatricals are given abundant opportunity in "A Little Scheme," by Cora S. Day. "Moro Fans," by an Ex-Soldier, is a timely article and the short stories are "Bonnibell's Dinner," by Harriet Whitney Durbin, and "A Cloudland Captive," by Mrs. Frank Lee. Fancywork comprises "Teneriffe Lace," "Hardanger Embroidery," "Beadwork on Canvas," and "Separate Motifs in Tatting." The patterns include advance styles for autumn, and a special article "For New Arrivals from Stork Town." Many other good things are ready to fly forth from the pages of the August Designer, but one must open its covers and loose them for oneself, for space will not permit further details.

Jess and Johnny.

A LOVE STORY.

By Annie Hamilton Donnell.

COPYRIGHT, 1903,
BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL.

"Miss it? Johnny? That he will! He's too likely a chap—goin to be foreman, certain—to be wastin himself like that. B'gosh, man, it'd be the ruination o' Johnny!"

"You quit comin down on Jess, Tim Bradlee! There ain't no other girl tendin looms to these works"—

"Oh, Jess is good enough; she's all right. I wouldn't look further myself if I didn't have my little old woman a'ready. Jess is all right, but there's the little un and the granny. That's where Johnny'd miss it."

"Yes, sure; there's the little un and the granny."

The second voice had dubious notes in it. There seemed no room for further argument.

Noonings, at the Liberty woolen mills, the men stood round in little groups of threes or fours, clinking their dinner pails as a needless whet to their appetites. It was a breach of etiquette in the unwritten code of Liberty woolen mills' law to open the dinner pails too soon. The girl operatives collected in the open windows or by themselves out in the yard—all but Jess. Jess went home at noon, though it was a long walk back and forth. She shot past the two speakers now, her lithe, beautiful figure balanced straight ahead. Of course she had heard. The little shabby man who had taken her part fidgeted nervously.

"You'd ought to watch out, Tim," he muttered.

"Watch out!" retorted the other. "You can't watch out for comets scootin acrost your tracks. Jess is a reg'lar comet."

The barren road, thick with white dust and scorching with stored up sun rays, stretched away from the great looming bulks of the "works" as if making a bee line to escape from them. Dimly, at its terminus, one could distinguish the rows upon rows of little houses flanked by two big boarding houses that made up Liberty. Liberty! The name was such a misfit. It was the one thing wanting in the little settlement—liberty.

Jessie Binney—or just Jess, as every one called her—sped down the hot roadway. She was going home to the little un and granny, and trying to outrun Johnny. Both spurs urged her on with equal incentives. She knew Johnny was behind—she could hear the pound of his big feet on the road, muffled by the carpet of white dust. She was so familiar with the sound. Ahead—way ahead—the little un was waiting. Jess was familiar with that too. The tiny, stooped figure always waited.

"Jess, Jess!" Johnny called, pleadingly. A little flavor of injury was in the sound of his voice. It was most a pity, after braving the men's jeers, to be treated this way. Johnny cherished the sweet memory of three red letter noonings when Jess, like the little un, had waited. He made the most of them—it seemed so likely they would have to suffice for him.

"Jess! I say, Jess!"

The girl forged ahead steadily. "But there's the little un and the granny—that's where Johnny'd miss it," sounded in her ears. She had known it before—yes, yes, certainly—but the men's voices made it distinctly clear to her now. The reiteration in her brain—"There's the little un and the granny—the little un and the granny"—only undermined it.

"I've found it out in plenty o' time," Jess congratulated herself grimly. Her thin, handsome face was set in lines of pain. The pounding steps behind changed their time abruptly. With a spurt of speed Johnny shot by her, and faced her in the dusty road.

"Jess, little girl," he said humbly. His good, brown face was wistful in its pleading. "You'll let me speak to you a minute, Jess? A minute ain't much to ask, now, is it?"

"No, no; let me go past, Johnny. I've got to. Granny's waiting for her tea, and the little un"—

"Must wait too. I'll make it up to the little un, Jess. What I've got to say is that I—I love you, Jess. I do it as honest and hearty as a man ever loved a woman ever. The Lord A'mighty knows I do. I want you to let me marry you, Jess. I want to have a right to take care o' you, Jess. Jess!"

He had hurried over the little speech as if time were precious, but the cry at the end came from his soul. He had his hard brown hands out to her.

"Let me go past, Johnny; let me go past!" cried Jess fiercely. She could not trust herself to look at him. It was her only safeguard.

"Answer me straight out, Jess Binney!" demanded Johnny, with stern despair. "Ain't I got the right to be answered same as other men? Ain't I? Ain't I waited long enough for an answer? No, no; not that, Jess! Don't say you don't love me! I—I know that. But I want you anyway. I'll be that good to you, little girl! I'll take that care o' you"—

Jess stared down the white roadway unseeingly. Even the little un's bowed figure, waiting, did not come within her vision. She began to speak in a harsh, strained voice.

"You want me to answer straight out—ain't that what you said, Johnny? Well, it won't take long, it's so short."

For one instant Jess let her eyes meet Johnny's. She towered, straight and pitiless, between him and the sun.

"No," she said quietly. "Now let me go past, Johnny."

The little un was whimpering softly to himself. Jess held out her hand to him with gentle conciliation. She was always gentle with the little un, and for her sake every one else was gentle too. He was tiny and weird, and his little childish face peered out through a tangle of yellow hair. It was not a misfit, this name. He would always be a little un in body and in mind.

"I'm hunger-y," he wailed. "You'd just's lieves I'd be hunger-y—yes, you would too! You—you want me to be hunger-y!"

"Why, little un! Why, little un!" crooned Jess soothingly, the mother sound in her voice. The little un could not remember any other mother but Jess. For six of his seven years she had mothered his misshapen, stunted little body tenderly.

"Why, little un, and sister was goin to give you such a nice puddin today! With"—

She bent over and whispered something in his ear.

"Plums!" shrieked the little un "Plums in it—plums!"

"Five of 'em, little un—all in your piece," Jess said, smiling in her pain, for her heart was like a stone in her breast. She could look back and see Johnny slouching back along the white, glaring road. She had sent him away from her. How could she mind the looms day after day without Johnny's tender words in her ears and Johnny to wait outside and walk home with her? How could she bear the unending grind of her young life without Johnny?

The vista of years that opened before her and reached into the dim perspective of old age—old age like granny's—stifled her and killed her courage. Her feet stumbled heavily along beside the little un's.

Granny was waiting too. There was scarcely time to get the plain little meal and hurry back at the clang of the factory bell. There was no time for Jess to eat, but it did not matter to her.

Weeks crept by until they were months, and it was crisp, late fall. Since that hot, white day when Johnny overtook her and the little un waited, whimpering, Johnny had never walked home with her. He had taken his answer stolidly and gone about among his looms with the plodding step of an old man. Jess had missed his sweet, shrill whistle above the muffled thunder of machines. Johnny had always whistled loudly for Jess to hear. She had told him once that it shortened the hours. Now he never whistled at all. When he met Jess, it was just a grave nod of his head he gave her.

On one of the autumn days Jess took the little un to the works with her because granny was ailing and his noise fretted her sadly. He had never been among the looms times enough to get used to their whirring, ceaseless activity. The novelty of it amused him, and for a long time he crouched contentedly by Jess. He was so still she forgot at last that he was there, and when he crept away on a little trip of discovery she did not notice. She was minding her loom in a daze of broken dreams and only the mechanical training of her eyes to detect imperfections and the prompt response of her fingers to correct them prevented trouble. Her well drilled sight and muscles stood guard while she dreamed.

In the middle of the afternoon a commotion arose at the farther end of the great room. People ran about, and there were excited shouts and one shrill, clear, frightened cry like a child's. Jess' eyes and ears were untrained to such sounds. They failed to reach her. She worked on dreamily. Some one beside her shook her arm and shrieked at her.

"Jess! Quick, Jess! Somebody's caught in the shaftin. Let's go—oh, hear 'em shoutin! Hurry, can't you?"

But Jess woke slowly from her dreams. She was the last one to mix in the excited little crowd. The girls and men were waiting for her with solemn faces. They made a straight path for her to the motionless form on the floor. The little un, with torn clothes, stumbled out of somebody's arms and met her half way.

"I'm killed! Oh, Jess, I'm killed!" he sobbed tumultuously. His poor little twisted body was quivering like a little shriveled leaf in the wind. "I'm killed all to pieces—it kept goin round and round. It wouldn't stop—Jess, Jess, listen!"

"He belongs to me. I'm goin to marry him."

But the girl had thrust him aside and darted ahead to Johnny, on the floor. He lay in a crushed heap, and even the men covered their eyes. One or two were sobbing like the little un.

"Where we goin to carry him to?" muttered Tim Bradlee huskily. "Johnny didn't have no home nor no folks."

He used the past tense unconsciously. This was not Johnny now—it had been. The girls stood about, wringing their hands hysterically.

"He warn't worth it—such a little humpbacked thing," somebody said shrilly.

"Sh, can't you? Do you want Jess to hear?" cried some one else. But there was no danger. Jess was wiping the blood from Johnny's face. She had only heard Tim Bradlee. With a sudden movement she stood before him.

"Carry Johnny to my house, Tim," she said quietly. "He belongs to me. I'm goin to marry him."

The girl's voice rang out distinctly. There was no quiver of doubt or of shame in it. She faced them all splendidly. One of the girls uttered a nervous sound that might have been a sob or a laugh. Jess caught the look on her face.

"I am goin to marry Johnny," she repeated sharply. "Oh, you needn't look that way, Moll Dixey! Johnny ain't dead. He belongs to me, and I tell you I'm goin to marry him. Won't somebody carry him to my house? Has anybody gone for a doctor?"

"Yes, yes, two of the boys," volunteered many voices. "He'd ought to be here inside o' the 'arf 'our. Stiddy, boys—easy!"

If Johnny had been a baby instead of a brawny, crushed giant, they could not have carried him more tenderly down the straight road outlined in crimson and gold. Relays followed, and the poor, unconscious load was shifted occasionally with the gentleness of mothers handling their babies. Jess and the little un went on ahead. The child was sobbing still under his breath, and his little torn clothes trailed, unnoticed, behind him. The horror of the terrible minute before Johnny sprang to his rescue was overkeen for his unbalanced little mind.

"I'm killed! I'm killed!" he moaned with patient reiteration. "You'd just as lieves I'd be killed, Jess; yes, you would too! You ain't sorry."

And Jess was not even thinking of the little un. She had forgotten him for once.

When Johnny woke out of his stupor, he thought he had gone to heaven and one of the angels was bending over him. She was very sweet and gentle. Why, it is Jess! Then Jess had gone to heaven too? Johnny experienced a sense of relief at the thought. It wouldn't be real heaven without Jess.

"Jess, little girl," he whispered, "when'd you come?"

"Sh! Johnny, don't talk. Yes, it's me. It's Jess. I'm taking care o' you. You've had a kind o'—o' sickness. Sh!"

And Johnny closed his eyes again, with a great joy mastering his pain. Slowly, very slowly, his awful bruises yielded to the gentle ministry of nature—and Jess. Very slowly Johnny lumbered back to life. The little settlement of Liberty had been under snow a month or more before he saw it again.

At first Jess had staid away from the works to nurse him; then she had gradually trusted him more and more to granny. She could not lose the money she earned at the looms.

One day Johnny sat up in bed and demanded a looking glass. Jess was at the factory. The little un sat on the foot of the bed playing with a bit of bright string.

"Say, little un, you know what a lookin glass is, hey? Well, you run and fetch me one," said Johnny.

"I know!" the little un cried delightedly. "I've got one myself. It came out o' a winder, and you can look through it and see the trees and the snow"—

"No, no! Ask granny. Granny'll know," the sick man said fretfully.

Granny came in with the looking glass, as a last resort, behind her, for Jess had said no. She looked frightened.

"There, there, Johnny! There, there! You go right to sleep and git rested up, or, if you'd ruther, I'll fetch you in some beautiful porridge. Jess made it," she added artfully.

"Fetch me a lookin glass!" roared Johnny. "I've been feelin over my face—there's somethin wrong with it."

Poor Johnny! It was all wrong. He had hazarded and lost all his rough manly beauty. The thin face on the pillow was wasted and marred.

"Granny, I'll get out o' bed if you don't fetch it," he persisted, and granny yielded weakly. The little un peered over Johnny's shoulder as he looked.

"Ain't you hombly, Johnny?" he piped shrilly. "My, your face is all crossways!"

When Jess came home, Johnny's face was turned away. He covered it with his great lean hands.

"Johnny, Johnny," quavered Jess, but she knew the mischief was done. It had to come. All her tenderness and foresight could not ward it off. Granny had only precipitated it a little.

How Jess had watched the terrible wounds heal slowly into ugly seams and suffered for Johnny! Not for herself, for what did Jess care for the ugliness that blighted Johnny's handsome face forever? It was still Johnny's face, and Johnny belonged to her. She was going to marry Johnny.

But her heart ached for him. She could hardly bear it. Today, speeding down the long stretch of roadway from the works, she had wished her face, too, could be seamed and marred like Johnny's. Jess knew the fresh, sweet beauty of her own face, and the contrast hurt her for Johnny.

"Poor Johnny!" murmured Jess. Another difficulty loomed over her—her public avowal before the men and girls the day of Johnny's sacrifice. Every word of it stood out like clear handwriting on the wall. They had all heard—all but Johnny. What would he think when he heard of it, too, outside, as he would be sure to do? He was getting stronger all the time. Soon he would be out again, and some of the boys would let the secret out.

But that trouble settled itself while Jess stood and looked down at Johnny's hidden face. The pity and the love in her soul crowded out everything else. She kept soothing the big white hands with her fingers over and over, and then she leaned down and kissed them. Johnny quivered from head to foot. "Johnny!" Jess cried. "Johnny, look up, look up! Please, dear!"

She forced away his hands with gentle firmness. She was looking down at him, laughing a little, shyly. A wave of crimson crept up across her sweet face. "What I've got to say is that I—love you, Johnny. The Lord Almighty knows I do. I want you to let me marry you. Johnny, you've got to! I said I was goin to. I told them all I was that day you saved the little un."

The rest she whispered with her face in his neck as she knelt beside the bed.

"Johnny, answer me straight out," she breathed. "Haven't I got a right to be answered same as—other women?"

She was laughing softly under her breath, but he could feel the hot blood in her face.

"I'm goin to marry you, Johnny," whispered Jess. "I love you, dear."

The little un stooped stealthily out to granny. His uncanny, strange child's face was full of awe, and he prodded granny's arm excitedly with a little sharp forefinger.

"My, Jess is kissin Johnny!" he shrilled. "An Johnny's kissin Jess!"

TEST THE PINEAPPLE CURE

In the Storehouse of Providence there's an Antidote for every bodily ill. Medical Science has found Nature's Stomach Panacea in that most delicious of fruits—the Pineapple.

And medical science has given to mankind that pure and pleasant formula Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets, to be an everlasting and never-failing healer to suffering humanity—a treatment quick and effective, and so inexpensive that the poorest sufferer in the land may use it almost as "free as water." One dose gives relief to stomach distresses in any form.

An Irish Jury.

A remarkable case in which Daniel O'Connell appeared was one in which a man was charged with murder. The evidence went all against the prisoner. When the time came for the defense to be made it was announced, "The murdered man will now be called." The supposed victim went into the box and satisfied the court as to his identity and existence in flesh. The judge directed the jury to return a formal verdict of not guilty, but the good men and true insisted on retiring and did so. Presently returning, they found the prisoner guilty. "Heavens, gentlemen," said the judge, "of what is he guilty? Not murder, surely?" "No, m'lord," replied the foreman, "but if he didn't murder the man he stole my old mare three weeks ago."

Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A.

Mr. George Frederick Watts, R.A., the famous English artist, became an exhibitor at the Royal Academy in the reign of William IV., and is the only artist who can now make that at any rate physiological boast. He was just in time, for that was the exhibition of 1837, and before it was closed the King was dead, and the Tories were appealing to the electorate in the name of "the young Queen and the old constitution." Other unique experiences are Mr. Watts'. He is not, perhaps, the only man who has refused high honors. A peerage went begging to Mr. Chaplin, and there is a tradition that Mr. Henniker Heaton, usually the most good-natured of men, steeled himself to say "no" to a proposal not often rejected. Mr. Watts, however, is the only painter who has the distinction of having refused a baronetcy. The Order of Merit, which he is the only Academician to hold, has been doubly won by the artist and the man. He was born at London in 1817.

A Story of Palmerston.

A street in a northwestern suburb of London, recently associated with a horrible crime, has had its name changed by desire of the residents. The incident recalls one of the happiest stories of Lord Palmerston. He was Home Secretary in the days of Palmer, the poisoner, and a deputation of Rugeley people came to the home office to ask if there was any obstacle to having the name of the town altered. The Home Secretary asked if the deputation had considered what the new name should be, and was answered in the negative. "Why not call it Palmerston?" suggested His Lordship and the proposal was received with acclamation. Only when the deputation got outside did its members realize that "Palmer's Town" was exactly what they did not want, and that the Home Secretary had wittily shelved the proposition. So Rugeley remains on the map.

Neither of Them Knew.

Lord Kelvin was once being shown over some big electric works by the foreman engineer, who was unaware of the identity of his visitor. The engineer was a capable man, and enthusiastic about his work, and he gave long lectures about everything to Lord Kelvin, who listened with great interest. Once or twice the senior partner, who was of the party, tried to tell the foreman to whom he was talking, but Lord Kelvin would not have it, and remained an attentive listener till the round of the works was concluded. Then, when the engineer had finished, he turned to him quietly, and said—"And what is electricity?" The man, somewhat abashed, admitted that the question was altogether beyond him. "Well, well," said Lord Kelvin, "that's the one thing about electricity you and I don't know."

Use Your Eyes

Do Not Abuse Them.

Strength comes by use that trains out that does not strain. If there is a hint or a sign of strain, if there are spots before the eyes, at times, if there is a headache or pain about the eyes, if there is a dizziness or letters become double or mixed, then you are injuring your eyes every day. These defects may seem small, yet if left to themselves they will grow and the only thing that will stop them is proper glasses, that is the kind we give. We give the examination that can leave no defect undiscovered. Consultation free.

LOVE UNALTERABLE.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments; love is not love,
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove.
Oh, no! it is an ever-fixed mark,
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out, even to the edge of doom.
If this be error, and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

—Shakespeare.

TO SEND A MAN BY POST.

It Can Be Done in England by Payment of a Mileage Fee.

The limit of weight for a parcel per parcel post is, as we all know, eleven pounds. No doubt, then, some Tit-Bits readers will be surprised that under certain conditions the postoffice will undertake to safely deliver weights many times in excess of that stated in the regulations.

One day last year a city gentleman called at St. Martin's le Grand with the object of consulting a directory and finding the address of a customer who lived in a remote part of Balham. He was not acquainted with the locality and was most anxious to see his customer at once. These facts he mentioned to an obliging clerk behind the counter.

He was at once informed that he could be sent to the required address "by registered post" at a fee of threepence a mile. The gentleman gladly accepted the offer, and in less than a minute found himself in charge of a smart messenger boy, who very soon guided him by the shortest route to his destination.

The boy carried in his hand a printed slip with a description of his charge under the heading, 'Article required to be delivered," and this he required the gentleman and customer to sign before he left the latter's house.

It is probable that very few people are aware of the regulation under which this curious postal transaction was accomplished. It reads thus: "A person may be conducted by express messenger to any address on payment of mileage fee."—Tit Bits.

A Smart Ruse.

A retired minister of the Church of Scotland, who was known to be careful in money matters, was returning home late one night from Edinburgh. It happened that the train did not go all the way. How was he to get over the remaining eight or nine miles without having to pay for hiring a trap and yet without walking? He was equal to the emergency. Going to the nearest posting establishment, he asked if there was a horse for sale. He was told there was and said he would like to give it a trial. The horse was harnessed and covered the nine miles in grand style. As soon, however, as the manse came in view the minister said: "That'll do. I'll get out now. It's not a bad horse, but he'll not suit me!"—London Times.

Could, Not Would.

Referring to the ninetieth birthday of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts it is recalled that at one time it was currently reported that the great Duke of Wellington wanted her for a wife. When the report reached the Waterloo hero he made this comment: "I said Miss Angela Burdett-Coutts deserved to be a duchess, not that I would make her one." On hearing what the famous soldier said, Miss Burdett-Coutts remarked quietly, "I think His Grace should have said could instead of would."

Admiral Schley, who has completed and will soon publish his memoirs, served in the Orient some thirty years ago.

"The Japanese," said Admiral Schley the other day, "fight in a way we can't understand. All these Eastern races, for that matter, fight differently from us.

"I remember the case of an Afreedee that a British officer once told me about. He said that in a certain campaign against the Afreedees a number of the natives themselves took sides with the whites, fighting their own people.

"The Afreedee in question was one of these turncoats. He stood one morning behind a rock, hopping about with great activity, and firing shot after shot at a figure dim in the distance.

"'Can't you hit that man?' said the officer, drawing near.

"'No, sar,' answered the Afreedee, 'I see him; but he dam hard to hit. He is, sar, hardest man to hit I know.'

"'Oh,' said the officer, 'you know him, do you?'

"'Oh, yes, sar. I know dam rascal well.'

"'Who is he?' the other asked.

"The Afreedee fired another shot at the distant figure. Then he replied:

"'Old dam rascal—he my father.'"

THE NORGE DISASTER.

Indescribable Excitement at Copenhagen on Receipt of the News—One Hundred and One Saved.

Copenhagen, July 5.—The news of the disaster to the Danish steamer Norge, off the west coast of Scotland, in which over 700 persons are reported to have lost their lives, created indescribable excitement here. The first message reached here at 4 o'clock yesterday morning. Crowds soon gathered about the offices of the line, relatives of those on board frantically seeking for information.

The Norge had no first-class passengers on board and only nine on her second cabin list. All the others were in the steerage.

There were on board 694 steerage passengers. Of these 79 were Danes, 68 Swedes, 296 Norwegians, 15 Finns and 236 Russians.

The Norge carried a crew of 71. She was the oldest Danish trans-Atlantic steamer running.

The flags are half-masted on all the ships and buildings here.

Capt. Gundell, the late commander of the Norge, was regarded as one of the best seamen of Denmark.

One Hundred More Saved.

Stornaway, Scotland, July 5.—One hundred and one survivors of the Danish steamer Norge have been landed here. The British steamer Cervona, from Leith, July 1, for Montreal, brought in thirty-two shortly before noon. She picked them up from a boat Sunday evening, westward of the Butt of Lewis. They were in a woeful plight, nearly all of them being naked. One dead child was with the party.

And 69 More on Energie.

Shortly afterwards the German steamer Energie arrived with sixty-nine persons, rescued from the Norge's lifeboat. All were terribly exhausted. The Cervona proceeded on her voyage, but will keep a lookout for other possible survivors of the Danish steamer.

The survivors say that altogether four of the Norge's boats got away. One boat, therefore, is unaccounted for.

London, July 5.—A despatch to Lloyds from Stornaway gives the number of Norge survivors on board the Energie as fifty-nine.

How Scholes Won.

Henley-on-Thames, July 5.—(C.A.P.)—Scholes and Stewart were on level terms for the first minute, then Scholes took a slight lead, but was rowing easy at the quarter mile, and leading by half a length. The time half way was 4.10, then Scholes increased his lead to about a length, and after three quarter distance was some lengths ahead, winning by about five lengths. Kelly viewed the race from the bow of the umpire's boat Rixon beat Ashe dead easy. Time, 9.18.

Appointments made.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very billous habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Billous headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

"I'm afraid I'm putting your family to some inconvenience," responded Albert, "and as it is not dark yet I will walk out on the point. I may see the yacht and save you all trouble."

The sun, a ball of fire, was almost at the horizon, the sea all around lay an

unruffled expanse of dark blue, undulating with the ground swells that caught the red glow of the sinking sun as they came in and broke upon the rocks. Albert walked on to the highest of the shore rocks and looked about. There was no sign of the Gypsy, and only one boat was visible, and that a dory rowed by a man standing upright. Over the still waters Albert could detect the measured stroke of his oars. That and the low rumble of the ground swells, breaking almost at his feet, were the only sounds. It was like a dream of solitude, far removed from the world and all its distractions. For a few moments he stood contemplating the ocean alight with the setting sun's red glow, the gray rocks at his feet and the tall white lighthouse towering above him, and then started around the point. He had not taken ten steps when he saw the figure of a girl leaning against a rock and watching the setting sun. One elbow was resting on the rock, her face reposing in her open hand and fingers half hid in the thick masses of hair that shone in the sunlight like burnished gold. A broad sun hat lay on the rock, and the delicate profile of her face was sharply outlined against the western sky.

She had not heard Albert's steps, but stood there unconscious of his scrutiny. He noted the classic contour of her features, the delicate oval of her lips and chin, and his artist eye dwelt upon and admired her rounded bosom and perfect shoulders. Had she posed for a picture she could not have chosen a better position, and was so alluring and withal so sweet and unconscious that for a moment he forgot all else, even his own rudeness in standing there and staring at her. Then he recovered himself and, turning, softly retraced his steps so as not to disturb her. Who she was he had no idea and was still wondering when he met Uncle Terry, who at once invited him into the house.

"This 'ere's Mr. Page, Lissy," he said as they entered and met a stout, elderly and gray haired woman. "I found him up the road a spell an' wantin' to know whar he was."

Albert bowed.

"I am sorry to intrude," he said, "but I had lost my boat and all points of the compass when your husband kindly took me in charge."

Being offered a chair, Albert sat down and was left alone. He surveyed the plainly furnished sitting room, with open fireplace, a many colored rag carpet on the floor, old fashioned chairs and dozens of pictures on the walls. They caught his eye at once, mainly because of the oddity of the frames, which were evidently homemade, and then a door was opened, and Uncle Terry invited him into a lighted room where a table was set. The elderly lady was standing at one end of it and beside her a younger one, and as Albert entered he heard Uncle Terry say, "This is our gal Telly, Mr. Page," and as he bowed he saw, garbed in spotless white, the girl he had seen leaning against the rock and watching the sunset.

CHAPTER XX.

THE appealing yet wondering glance that Albert Page met as he bowed to the girl standing beside the table that evening was one he never afterward forgot. It was only one, for after that and during the entire meal her blue eyes were kept veiled by their long lashes or modestly directed elsewhere.

"It's a charming spot down here," he remarked soon after the meal began, "and so hidden that it is a surprise. I noticed the light as we came in, but did not see the village."

"Waal, ye didn't miss anything," responded his host. "None o' the houses are much for style, an' mebbe it's lucky they're hid behind the rocks."

"I thought them quaint and comfortable," observed Albert, "but what an odd name you have for the place! Why do you call it Saint's Rest?"

"Chiefly 'cause none o' the people have any chance to become sinners, I reckon," was the answer. "It's a trifle lonesome in the winter, though."

"I suppose fishing is your principal occupation here," continued Albert, seeing that sentiment was not considered by Uncle Terry. "Your land does not seem adapted for cultivation."

"There ain't much chance for tillin'," he replied. "The land's wuss'n whar I was brung up, down in Connecticut, an' thar we had ter round up the sheep once a week an' sharpen thar noses on the grin'stun! We manage ter raise 'nough ter eat, though."

When the meal was over Uncle Terry said: "It's nice an' cool out on the rocks, an' thar's some seats out thar. If ye enjoy smokin' we best go out while the wimmin are doin' the dishes."

The moon that Frank had planned to use was nearing its full and high overhead, and as the two men sought congeniality in tobacco out on that lonesome point Albert could not curb his admiration for the scene. His offer of a cigar to his host had been accepted, and as that quaint man sat quietly enjoying an odor and flavor he was unaccustomed to Albert said:

"This experience has been a surprise to me from the moment I met you. I had an ugly hour's scramble over the rocks and through a tangle of scrub spruce and briers until I was utterly lost and believed this island an impassable wilderness. Then you came along and brought me to one of the most beautiful spots I ever saw. I should like to stay here all summer and do nothing but look at this magnificent ocean view and sketch these bold shores."

"Do you paint picturs too?" queried Uncle Terry, suddenly interested. "Telly's daft on doin' that, an' is at it all the time she can git." Then he added with a slight reflection of pride. "Mebbe ye noticed some o' her picturs in the sittin' room?"

"I saw a lot of pictures there," answered Albert, "but it was too dark to see them well. I should like to look at them in the morning."

"Ye'll hev plenty o' time," was the reply, "I must pull my lobster traps fust, an' after that I'll take ye in my dory an' we'll go an' find yer boat. I guess she must be lyin' in Seal cove, the only openin' 'twixt here an' the head she'd be likely ter run into."

"And so your daughter is an artist, is she?" asked Albert, indifferent now as to where the Gypsy was or when he was likely to return to her. "Has she ever taken lessons?"

"No, it comes nat'ral to her," replied Uncle Terry; "she showed the bent o' her mind 'fore she was ten years old, an' she's pestered me ever since ter git her canvas an' paints an' sich. But then, I'm willin' ter," he added in a tender tone. "Telly's a good girl, an' Lissy an' me set great store by her. She's all we've got in the world." Then pointing to a small white stone just to the right of where they were, he added, "Thar's whar the other one's been layin' fer mor'n twenty years."

"This one has grown to be a very beautiful girl," said Albert quietly, "and you have reason to be proud of her."

Uncle Terry made no reply, but seemed lost in a reverie, and Albert slowly puffed his cigar and looked out on the ocean and along the ever widening path of moonlight. He wished that this fair girl, so quaintly spoken of, were there beside him, that he might talk to her about her art. How it could be managed and what excuse to give for remaining longer than the morrow he could not see. He looked toward the house, white in the moonlight, with the tall lighthouse and its beacon flash just beyond, and wondered if he should see the girl again that night. He was on the point of suggesting they go in and visit a little with the ladies when Uncle Terry said:

"I believe ye called yerself a lawyer, Mr. Page, an' from Boston. Do ye happen to know a lawyer thar that has got eyes like a cat an' rubs his hands as if he was washin' 'em while he's talkin'?"

Albert gave a start. "I do, Mr. Terry," he answered. "I know him well. His name is Frye, Nicholas Frye."

"An' as ye're a lawyer, an' one that looks to me as honest," continued Uncle Terry, "what is yer honest opinion of this Mr. Frye?"

"That is a question I would rather not answer," replied Albert, "until I know why you ask it and what your opinion of Mr. Frye is. Mine might not flatter him, and I do not believe in speaking ill of anybody unless forced to."

Uncle Terry was silent, evidently revolving a serious problem in his mind. "I am goin' to beg yer pardon, Mr. Page," he said at last, "fer speakin' the way I did regardin' lawyers in gineral. My 'sperence with 'em has been bad, an' naterally I don't trust 'em much. I've had some dealin's with this 'ere Frye 'bout a matter I don't want to tell 'bout, an' the way things is workin' ain't as they should be. I b'lieve I'm robbed right along, an' if ye're willin' to help me I shall be most tarnally grateful an' will give ye my word I'll never let on to anybody what ye say—an' Silas Terry never yit broke his promise."

Albert silently offered his hand to Uncle Terry, who grasped it cordially. "I will tell you, Mr. Terry," he said after the handshake, "all I know about Mr. Frye and what my opinion is of him. What your business with him is, matters not. I am certain you will keep your word. I recently worked for Mr. Frye six months and left him to open an office for myself. In that six months I became satisfied Nicholas Frye was the most unprincipled villain ever masked under the name of lawyer. If all those you have had business with were like him, I don't wonder at your remark today."

Uncle Terry leaned forward, with elbows on his knees, resting his face in the palms of his hands, and ejaculated: "I knew it! I knew it! I'm a blamed old fool an' ought to hev a keeper put over me!" Then turning to Albert he added, "I've paid that thief over $400 this year an' hain't got a scrap of paper to show fer 't, an' nothin's been done so fer as I kin see 'bout the business." He meditated a few moments and then turning around suddenly added: "My wife an' Telly don't know nothin' 'bout this, an' I don't want they should. Thar's a sucker born every minit an' two to ketch him, an' I b'lieve it! I've been ketched an' skinned fer dead sure. I want to sleep on't, an' mebbe in the mornin' I'll tell ye the hull story an' how I've been made a fool of. I'm beginnin' to think I kin trust ye."

"I thank you for your good opinion," answered Albert, "and if I can help you in any way I will."

When the two returned to the house, Albert was shown to a room that reminded him of his boyhood home, the old fashioned bed, spotless counterpane and muslin curtains all seemed so sweet and wholesome. A faint odor of lavender carried him back to the time when his mother's bed linen exhaled the same sweet fragrance. He lighted a cigar and sat down by a window where the crisp salt sea air came in, and tried to fathom what manner of business Uncle Terry could have with Frye. And into this meditation also crept the face and form of the girl he had first seen watching the sunset.

CHAPTER XXI.

WHEN Albert arose the next morning the sun was just appearing round and red out of the ocean and a crisp breeze blowing into the open windows. He heard the stir of some one below and, dressing quickly, descended to the sitting room. No one was there, and he stood for a moment looking at the curiously framed paintings that almost covered the wall.

One in particular caught his eye. It was a ship careened on the ocean with waves breaking upon her. She was resting on rocks that barely showed beneath, and in her rigging, heavily covered with ice, were five men. All around was the sea, tossed into giant waves, curling and breaking about the stranded vessel. He noted the lifelike shading of the green and white billows, the ice that covered every shroud and rope and spar, and peering out of a cabin door was a woman holding a babe in her arms. In a way it was a ghastly picture and one that held his attention from all the rest.

It was framed in a broad, flat molding covered with shells. He was still gazing at it when he heard Uncle Terry's voice bidding him good morning.

"Ain't ye up a little arly?" said that worthy. "I hope ye slep' well. I gin'rally roust out by daylight an' put out the light an' then start a fire, but thar was no need of you gittin' out so soon."

"I think the waves woke me," replied Albert, "and the morning is so beautiful I couldn't waste it in bed."

"I'm goin' over to the cove to mend a trap," continued Uncle Terry, "an' if ye're willin' I'd like to hev ye go along too. The wimmin 'll hev breakfast ready by that time, an' then I'll take ye up to Seal cove an' see if yer boat's thar."

He seemed depressed and not inclined to talk, and Albert sat on an overturned dory and watched him puttering away over a lobster trap. His hat had fallen off, and the sea winds blew his scant fringe of gray hair over his bald head. His brown shirt was open at the throat, disclosing a bony neck, and his well worn garments showed the outlines of a somewhat wasted form. What impressed Albert more than all this was the dejected manner of Uncle Terry. When he finished fixing the trap he pulled a dory in that was moored out in the cove and carefully bailed and wiped it clean. When this was done he said almost wistfully: "I've worried a good deal 'bout what ye told me last night, an' I'd like to have a good talk with ye. I s'pose ye're anxious to see yer friends an' let 'em know ye're all safe, an' I'll take ye up the island the fust thing an' then go an' pull my traps, an' then if ye're willin' we'll sot down, if it ain't askin' too much o' ye to wait," he added almost pathetically. "I'll get Telly to show ye her picturs, an' mebbe ye can give her some p'ints as 'll help her."

"I shall be more than glad to do so," replied Albert, "but if that shipwreck scene is hers, she needs no advice from me."

Uncle Terry looked pleased, but made no answer. On the way back to the house he said, "I'd ruther ye'd make no mention to the wimmin of our hevin' any talk."

At the breakfast table he seemed in better spirits and more like himself.

"I think ye told me last night," he remarked, addressing Albert, "that ye painted picturs yerself some." And then, turning to Telly, he added, "Mr. Page is comin' back here bimeby jest to look round, an' mebbe he'd like to look at some of yourn."

Telly's face flushed slightly. "I shall be delighted," added Albert, "if Miss Terry will favor me. Will you?" he added in a persuasive tone.

"I do not feel that my pictures are good enough to show to strangers," she answered in a low voice. "I have never had any lessons or any one to show me."

"From what I've noticed in your sitting room," responded Albert quickly, "you need not be ashamed to show them to an artist. I am not one. I only sketch a little, just as a remembrance of places I visit, but I love pictures even better than music."

"I will gladly show you what I have done," replied Telly simply, and there the conversation ended. When the meal was over Albert observed, "With your permission, Mrs. Terry, I would like to make a sketch of your home and the lighthouse, and after Mr. Terry has helped me to find my friends I am coming back." Then, turning to Telly, he added, "I can then feel easy in my mind and shall enjoy looking over your paintings."

"Won't ye stop to dinner with us?" asked Aunt Lissy as Albert thanked her for her hospitality. "We'll be glad to have ye."

"I will, thank you," replied Albert. "This point, and in fact this village, was such a surprise to me and is so charming I am going to devote all my day to it." Then, bidding the ladies good morning, he followed Uncle Terry over to the cove, where they boarded his dory and started out to find the Gypsy.

"And she has the soul of an artist in her," Albert said to himself, as Uncle Terry pulled the dory out of the harbor and up the coast toward where he had been left stranded. "And what eyes, and what a perfect form!"

As good luck would have it, when they rounded a point, there was the Gypsy following the island shore down to meet them. Albert stood up and waved his cap. He was answered by the whistle and in an instant every one on board of her, even the crew, were out on her bows and waving caps lustily. The skipper kept the whistle blowing, and as the yacht slowed down and Uncle Terry pulled alongside, Albert was seized and almost dragged on board. Frank was so overjoyed he hugged him and then gave vent to a war whoop that might have been heard the entire length of Southport island.

"We guessed what had happened to you," he said, "when we picked up your boat. It was almost dark when one of the crew saw an empty boat floating up the bay. We were all down in the cabin at that time and had not noticed how late it was, when he called us. Two of the crew lowered the other boat and when they got back with yours we nearly had a fit. The missing cushions and loop on the painter gave us a clew and we half expected you would find your way back to the Gypsy by land."

"I guess you're not much acquainted with the interior of Southport island," put in Albert, and then going forward he brought back Uncle Terry and introduced him to the crowd. By this time the Gypsy was almost down to the Cape and, under one bell and the direction of Uncle Terry, she slowly steamed in. That worthy man had been looking over her and his admiration was evident.

"A purty slick craft, boys," he said to the party as the Gypsy's anchor ceased rattling out of the hawsehole—"a purty slick craft, an' must 'a' cost a heap o' money."

Then as he pulled his own weather beaten dory that had been towing astern along to the gangway, Albert stepped up to him and said in a low voice:

"Will you excuse me a little while, Mr. Terry? I want to change my clothes and in an hour or so I will come ashore and not only thank you for all your kindness, but make you a visit."

When Uncle Terry had gone Albert related his experiences for the past eighteen hours to the party—that is, all but one incident, or rather surprise. Then nothing would do but they must all go ashore and look the quaint little village over.

Albert stood up and waved his cap.

"I wish you would keep away from the lighthouse, boys," Albert said, as they were getting into their boat. "Mr. Terry's family are rather sensitive people and may not like to have a lot of us trooping around their place. I am going over there this afternoon to make a sketch, and then I'll ask permission and we'll all go there some other day."

He had whispered to Frank to remain on the yacht, and when the rest were gone he said to him: "Frank, I am going to confide something to you. The fact is, Frank, I've tumbled into an adventure and fallen in love with a girl on sight and without having exchanged ten words with her! She is Mr. Terry's daughter, and has eyes that take your breath away and a form like the Venus of Milo. She paints pictures that are a wonder, considering she never has taken a lesson, and has a face more bewitching than any woman's I ever saw. It is like a painter's dream."

"Well, you have gone daft, old man," replied the astonished Frank.

"But you haven't heard it all yet. This unique old man, who saved me from sleeping all night in a thicket of briers and who has opened his heart and home to me, has fallen into the clutches of—Nicholas Frye!"

"Great Scott!" exclaimed Frank. "And how on earth did he ever find Frye, or Frye find him? Was your old man of the island hunting around Boston for some one to rob him?"

"That I do not know yet," replied Albert. "All I know is that Mr. Terry has paid Frye about $400, and, as he says, so far has nothing to show for it. What the business was I expect to learn later. Now, what I am coming at is this: Can't you manage to leave me here for the rest of the day, or, better still, make it two days? I'll tell the boys I've tumbled into a bit of law business, which is what I think will come out of it, and you can run down to Bar Harbor and back here tomorrow night."

"Well, I'll do that gladly," replied Frank, and then he added with a droll smile, "It will give you a chance to say a few sweet things to this girl with the wondrous eyes, eh, Bert?"

CHAPTER XXII.

IT was nearly noon when Albert left the yacht. He had exchanged his bedraggled yachting suit for a neat gray one, and with a small satchel, his sketchbook and a box of choice Havanas for Uncle Terry he rowed ashore. For three hours the Gypsy had been the cynosure of all the Cape eyes, old or young, for a handsome 200 ton yacht was a novelty in their little harbor. When she steamed slowly out, with Frank and his companions, in natty white duck suits, grouped on her stern, she was a pretty sight, and as she cleared the narrow entrance the crew fired three guns and dipped her flag in honor of Albert, and then he picked his way over the rocks to the lighthouse. Uncle Terry had not returned from hauling his lobster traps, and Aunt Lissy and Telly met him at the door. It is likely that his being one of the yachting party impressed them a little, for they were both dressed in their best. He was invited in, and then Aunt Lissy said, "Please excuse me, fer I have dinner to git, an' Telly will entertain ye."

"And show me her pictures, I hope," put in Albert, with his most persuasive smile.

It was an awkward position for Telly and one that she had never before been called upon to fill. Rather shy naturally, and her sole acquaintance with the usages of society limited to the few people among whom she had been brought up, to be called upon to entertain a smartly dressed and citified young man was a decidedly new experience. Albert saw her embarrassment and with true gallantry at once set about making her feel at ease.

"Please do not feel that you must try to entertain me, Miss Terry," he said. "Only show me your pictures and tell me about them."

"I am almost ashamed to," she replied timidly. "Father says you are an artist yourself."

"Oh, no, Miss Terry!" exclaimed Albert quickly. "He misunderstood me. I only sketch a little and once in awhile make an effort to put a sketch that is of interest on canvas. All I can tell is when one looks lifelike. For instance," pointing to it, "that shipwreck scene. It is wonderfully well done. Did you paint it from a real wreck?"

Telly colored. "No, sir," she answered, "that was all done from father's description of a wreck that took place off the point one winter when I was a baby." Then, as if to check further

It is the just reward

—FOR—

Good Workmanship.
Reasonable Prices.
Promptness and the use of Best Materials.

Nothing

Of the CHEAP material nature finds its way into our paint.

We use nothing but pure white lead and pure Raydon oil. It would not pay us to adulterate with fish oil, coal oil or benzine—as is sometimes done to quote cut price.

Our reputation comes first and at any cost it must abide.

But While Speaking of Cost.

Consider this.

That we buy our lead and oils in huge quantities for our own use. Come to our warehouse and see for yourself the ton upon ton of lead.

Visit our vaults and see our Oils purchased in carload lots to get the price at its lowest.

The same regarding our dry and wet colors, and painters' materials, the quantity wholesale buying gives us the greatest of advantage in selling—and in executing your work.

Gives you the advantage of having your work done with the best of materials and at low prices.

What we say of paint we can also say of Wall-hangings.

No buyer of Wallhangings in Canada can lay down Wall Papers at lower prices than we do. Few can purchase at as low prices. As we have the best American and Canadian agencies.

A staff of twenty expert workmen at your disposal.

Where the Love Vine Grows

By INA WRIGHT-HANSON

Copyright, 1903, by Ina Wright-Hanson

"I believe in some signs," said Phyllis, speaking for the first time during the conversation. We turned to her inquiringly.

"Which ones?" asked Aunt Myra.

Phyllis held up her embroidery frame (I suppose that's what it was) and looked critically at her work. She pulled the linen a little; she frowned a little. Phyllis is charming when she smiles, and just then I discovered that she is delightful when she frowns—that is when she does not frown at me.

"I have done that stitch very well," she remarked complacently. "I will show my work to Juanita, daughter of Juan." And she left the veranda.

"That child!" scolded Aunt Myra. "Instead of sitting quietly here in the shade, she must toil through the heat to learn drawn work of that old Mexican. She has forgotten her sunshade too."

"I AM GLAD I FOUND YOU OUT," SHE SAID WITHERINGLY.

"I will take it to her," I said, running down the steps. It behooved me to be helpful to Aunt Myra, for it was only after much cajolery that she had taken me as a summer boarder on her ranch, bordering on the desert and bounded on three sides by foothills.

Halfway to the cabin of Juanita are a log and a sycamore tree. We sat down.

"Is there anything more beautiful than this dear old desert, with its sage bush and cacti?" Phyllis began. "Look! See that dear, cunning, little lizard! Oh, he has lost his tail!"

"He will grow another," I answered cheerfully. "Yes; there is something more beautiful than the desert. You are."

"How amusing your comparisons are!" bantered Phyllis, turning her brown eyes sideways on me. "That's like your saying that you admire that Japanese death urn more than the Indian bowl when I asked you if you were interested in Indian pottery."

"Well, you can't deny that it was far handsomer," I persisted.

"Of course," impatiently. "But there is no comparison. It's like comparing a piano and a cook stove."

"Say, Phyllis, what signs do you believe in? You forgot to tell us."

"In the love vine."

I hated to show my ignorance after her rather severe criticism on my comparisons, so I folded my hands and waited. In a moment she continued:

"You know if you put a little scrap of love vine on a bush and you name it for somebody you care for and it lives, why, it's a sign that he loves you, and if it doesn't live he doesn't love you."

"Ah!" I breathed responsively.

"I tried it once. Teddy and I each got a piece"—

"Who's Teddy?" I growled.

"Oh, a man! We each got a piece and put them on a nice green bush. We named them each other's names, and if they grew we were to marry."

A pause while I dug my heel savagely into the sand.

"Well, why don't you ask if they grew?"

"Of course they grew," I muttered.

"They did not grow," she said firmly, "and so I did not marry Teddy. He was very handsome," she sighed.

"I wish I were," I remarked tentatively.

"You do well enough as you are. It isn't always the handsomest men that are the best. I remember that what I admired most about Teddy was that he could wiggle his ears and move his scalp."

A suspicion came to me. "How long ago was that?" I asked sternly.

"Oh, I don't know! It was the summer I was ten."

Another pause while I meditated and stole glances at Phyllis. How lovely she was—brown hair, inclined to curl; brown eyes, with a little glint of gold in them; brown skin, with a tinge of healthy red; small, slender, captivating!

"Phyllis," I said suddenly, "I have been wanting to ask you for a long time. I—I—what's the use of putting me off? I—I"—

She rose hastily. "I had nearly forgotten Juanita, daughter of Juan. I"—

"Hang the daughter of Juan!" I exclaimed. "I want an answer. You don't need a lifetime to consider. Phyllis, dear, don't you know what I am trying to say? Can't you help a fellow out a little?" I halted and wiped my perspiring brow.

"I think you are trying to ask me if I won't try the sign of the love vine with you," she answered sweetly. "Why, of course I will."

So, a trifle sulkily, I went across the hot, white sand, and Phyllis went with me, picking her way daintily over the rocks, avoiding the cactus plants, which, though engaging enough to call forth rare adjectives from Phyllis, were not desirable at close quarters. Here luxuriantly grew the dodder, a parasite, clinging and golden; a thief and a murderer of the plant on which it feeds. We each tore off a piece and went back to the sycamore.

"We will put it right here on this bush," she said. "You see there is none for yards around, so we can't make any mistake. We won't come here for a week, and then we will come together and see if it has lived."

"And if it has?"

"If it has," she said shyly, and if Phyllis is charming when she smiles and delightful when she frowns she is altogether irresistible when she is shy—"if it has, why, we love each other truly, and—and"—

"And we will marry!" I cried, trying to catch her in my arms, but she ran swiftly toward the cabin of the daughter of Juan, calling back over her shoulder:

"But it may not live, you know."

"Today we visit the sycamore," I whispered to Phyllis when the week had gone.

"At 4 o'clock," she whispered back. "It's too warm now."

As though the heat had ever before mattered to the little witch. She had disappeared, and my book was dull. It was only 3. I might as well take a walk till she was ready. Strangely, I soon found myself at the sycamore tree, looking around for our love vine. It had not lived!

I looked across the gleaming white sand and up into the cloudless sky. It had to be done, of course. I took off my coat and sighed. Then out into the relentless sunshine I walked, out where luxuriantly grew the dodder, clinging and golden, a thief and a murderer—yes, and a liar, too, but I would soon remedy that.

In a few moments every bush near the sycamore was resplendent with love vine, looking as though it had grown there for years. As I picked up a telltale thread from the road and straightened up to admire my handiwork I nearly fell flat upon it. Under the sycamore tree stood Phyllis, a covered basket upon her arm and a cold, cold look on her lovely face!

"I am glad I found you out," she said witheringly, sitting down upon the extreme end of the log, "before it was forever too late."

I sat down on the other extreme end.

"Phyllis," I said solemnly, "have you not yet learned that a man would commit any crime for a beautiful woman? And surely what I did is not so bad as murder, or—or—arson, is it?"

"Not quite so bad, perhaps," she sighed.

I moved nearer. She set the basket between us. As I scowled at it I saw hanging from it a yellow thread. I pulled at it stealthily. It was dodder! That creation of willow was full of dodder!

Then I set the basket deliberately upon the ground and took Phyllis into my arms.

"There may have been extenuating circumstances," she murmured.

A Musical Malaprop.

Among such a mass of players as comprise a great orchestra there are "characters" enough to supply a new Dickens. One of these characters, according to the Saturday Evening Post, is noted more for his love of big words than knowledge of their meaning. During Mr. Seidl's lifetime he played in the orchestra at Brighton Beach. One day the tuba player, who sat back of him, had a very difficult part to play in Liszt's symphonic poem, "Mazeppa." Hearing his heartfelt sigh of relief on its conclusion, Mr. Malaprop turned and asked, "Barnum had one, hadn't he?"

"What?" was the query.

"A Mazeppa of course," was the answer. He had confounded the hero of Byron with a zebra.

"Do we play this with or without reputation?" he asked one day of a colleague.

Playing in a new theater on tour, the man who sat next him looked up and announced, "The acoustics are bad here."

"Are they?" he said critically, sniffing the air. "I have such a cold that I can't smell. But I take your word for it."

Plant Forms Seen In Coal.

The substance of coal has been so compressed that the forms of the plants composing it cannot usually be seen, but when a piece of it is made so thin that it will transmit light and is then subjected to a powerful microscope vegetable structure may readily be distinguished. Immediately under every separate seam of coal there is a stratum of what is known as fire clay. This stratum is always present and contains in great abundance the fossil impressions of roots and stems and twigs, showing that it was once the soil from which vegetation grew luxuriantly.

It is common also to find fossil tree stems lying mashed flat between the layers of black slate which form the roofs of coal mines as well as the impressions of the leaves, nuts and seeds which fell from these trees while they were living. In some beds of cannel coal whole trees have been found, with roots, branches, leaves and seeds complete and all converted into the same quality of coal as that by which they were surrounded.

FAMILY HISTORY.

Why It Should Be Studied by Those Contemplating Matrimony.

The fact that the offspring may be the heir to the morbid tendencies of the parents makes it imperative that the greatest care should be exercised in the selection of a spouse, but one should not grow too wary and hypercritical. No generation ever existed which did not possess some abnormality, and a rational mode of life will tend to ameliorate certain untoward affections. The rule of the life insurance companies to inquire into the family history of the applicant would be a prudent course for those intending marriage to adopt. Even if the aspirant to marriage evinces no unhealthy symptoms, a minute study of the physical condition of his immediate relatives might disclose the morbid tendency to which he or she is heir. Whenever anomalies and signs of degeneration repeatedly present themselves in preceding and present generations, thus proving the ascendency of such morbid affections, we may assume that subsequent generations will not be spared, and marital union with a member of such a family should be emphatically interdicted. Among the lower classes and for that matter also among those of higher standing the fact that "there is tuberculosis (or insanity) in the family" is perhaps the only deterrent to contemplated conjugal union, and here it is the graphic and obvious manifestation of the diseases which inspire the dread. Of the nature of the numerous other grave and disastrous affections the public in general is woefully ignorant. Unless the dangers that await them are imparted to them in an intelligible manner there can be little hope for the amelioration of present conditions.

MME. TUSSAUD.

The Famous Waxen Model Artist of Paris and London.

Mme. Tussaud was already famous in Paris before she went to England. It was with two of her waxen reproductions, seized by the people for a parade through the streets of Paris, that the French revolution was started. The soldiers attacked the figures. Two days later followed the memorable storming of the Bastille. Modeling wax had been the fashionable craze of the court and the rich. It was caught from a physician of Berne named Curtius, who turned to fine art his remarkable skill in modeling anatomical specimens and was invited to Paris by the Prince de Conti. Mme. Tussaud, nee Marie Gresholtz, the child of a soldier, was his niece and adopted daughter, first his pupil and finally his master. There were few personages whose names are famous now in connection with the revolution who did not "sit" to the young artist in wax. The heads of some she had to model after the guillotine had been employed upon them. She gave lessons in the art to the king's sister, Mme. Elizabeth, among other illustrious persons, and was imprisoned with Josephine de Beauharnais, afterward empress. Even in those early days M. Curtius had a "chamber of horrors."

But after the revolution Mme. Tussaud left France forever. Nor did she at first find times in England much more propitious. After trying the Strand she moved to Blackheath, then a popular resort, but at last had to go on tour from town to town. It was not till 1835 that she was able to settle permanently in London.

Alaska's Glaciers.

Glacier bay is the most accessible region in which to see large tidewater glaciers of Alaska. There are eight glaciers which discharge bergs into its waters. The largest of these is Muir glacier, which drains an area of about 800 square miles. It is moving with a maximum velocity of about seven feet a day and is continually discharging large icebergs from its end. Its fluctuations have been great within recent times. One or two hundred years ago it extended, in common with the other glaciers of the bay, twenty miles below its present ending, and not long before that the glaciers were so small that valleys now barren and bleak were occupied by large forests.

Beauties of Translating.

In New Britain a missionary in translating was seeking some native idiom to convey the idea of a binding oath when a chief suggested that the desired phrase was, "I would rather speak to my wife's mother than do such and such a thing."

In British Columbia a missionary wanted his catechist to translate "A crown of glory that fadeth not away." This was done to the satisfaction of all concerned, but ultimately the missionary found to his horror that it had been rendered, "A hat that never wears out!"

An Awful Mistake.

"You say the thoughtless act of Mrs. Stingyleigh caused her husband a serious relapse? What did she do, in heaven's name?"

"Why, she came right into the sick room arrayed in a very expensive hat and dress."

Tickled With a Feather.

"I never knew any one who could be so tickled with a feather as my wife."

"Ticklish, is she?"

"Not usually, but this was an ostrich feather she bought at a bargain sale."

Sunshine Furnace

DOUBLE FEED-DOORS

Just about the meanest thing a furnace can have is a dinky little door. Ever have one? Hit the edge as often as the hole? One has to be an expert stoker to shovel coal into some furnaces. If you're not an expert you'll get as much on the floor as in the furnace.

The Sunshine furnace is equipped with a good, big door. You can put your shovel in and drop the coal just where it is wanted—no trouble, no taking aim, no missing, no scattering, or annoyance.

Everything about the Sunshine furnace is on the same scale of thoughtfulness.

Wedding Bells.

GARBUTT—CROUTER.

A very pretty house wedding took place at the home of Mrs. John E. Crouter Albury, Tuesday evening, June 28th, at eight o'clock, when her third daughter, Miss Bertha Rose, was married to Mr. John H. Garbutt, of Ameliasburg. Rev. R. M. Pope officiated and Miss Ida Williams played the wedding march. The house was very tastefully decorated with roses and ferns. The bride, who was given away by her brother, Mr. F. Crouter, was prettily attired in white organdie and carried a beautiful bouquet of white carnations. Her sister, Miss Etta Crouter, gracefully did the honors of bridesmaid, while the groom was ably supported by Mr. Evans Weese. After hearty congratulations the guests, numbering over fifty, partook of a sumptuous supper, served in a large canvas tent on the lawn. Later in the evening the happy couple, amid showers of rice, left for Rochester and other points of interest. The bride, who is held in high esteem by a large circle of friends, was the recipient of numerous, beautiful and useful presents. Mr. and Mrs. Garbutt will reside in Ameliasburg.

Mining Matters.

(Marmora Herald.)

Mr. W. A. Hungerford started up the mill at Deloro on Monday last to crush 2,000 tons of ore for the Cook Company Mine situated at the south of Deloro.

Mr. Henry Lloyd, Superintendent of the Sovereign Gold Mine at Malone, was in town on Monday. He says the ten stamp mill has been thoroughly overhauled and repaired and will shortly be started crushing rock. Work has commenced at the gold mine at Bannockburn by the Continental Mines Co.

Mr. Bernard Ganville, an expert mining engineer with Mr. Bruckner, of New York, visited the Boerth, International, Cordova, Deloro and other mines of the district last week and spent Saturday evening in town. Mr. Ganville is very favorably impressed with the district. He thinks there should be much more capital invested and operating done on a far larger scale to make the low grade ores pay.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh... especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

GOVERNOR MEETS THE KILTIES.

THEY PLAY THE BAGPIPES FOR HIM, JUST AS THEY DID BEFORE THE QUEEN.

The Harrisburg, Penn., Telegraph, in its issue of June 29, says: The visit of the Kilties Military Concert Band, of Belleville, Canada, to the capitol this morning, at 10 o'clock, was perhaps the first time that a body of British soldiery has ever been inside the walls of that building and Governor Pennypacker was at his desk at precisely 10, as per appointment. At that hour the Kilties marched up the Capitol steps and directly into the rooms of the Chief Executive. Here Bromley Wharton, the Governor's private secretary, awaited the coming of the band, the members of which were introduced to the Governor. The band in taking their leave of the Governor played on the pipes. The band then took a special car and were taken around the city to see the sights.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

A SOUTH AFRICAN VETERAN TAKES TO HIMSELF A WIFE.

A quiet home wedding took place last evening at the residence of Mrs. Mary Bowen, Moira street, when her daughter, Miss Jennie, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert McCoy, of Montreal, formerly of this city. Rev. Jas. P. Wilson, pastor of Bridge Street Church, officiated. The bridesmaid was Miss Lizzie Dowser, and Mr. James Diamond did honors for the groom. After the ceremony the wedding repast was partaken of. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy then left for thier home in Montreal. Both are well known in this city, the groom being a South African veteran. Their many friends will unite with The Intelligencer in offering congratulations.

Mr. Curtis Replies.

Mr. Editor,—I saw in your paper of the 30th inst., an article referring to "Talk Much Curtis," which I understand refers to me. Now, Mr. Editor, talk is cheap, sometimes, and has done more good and more harm than anything else in this world. There has been more money made and more lost by talking than through any other cause The lawyer, the member of parliament and the clergyman and merchant makes his living by talk. It is different with the mechanic, laborer and farmer. For myself, I do some talking and some thinking, and I wish to say here that I think if there had been more talking done in our City Hall and less bonuses given away it would have been much better for the taxpayer.

For a little talk, the city has given directly and indirectly to the Grand Trunk Company $75,000. This company has never done anything for the good of the city' in return for it—all Belleville has so far received from them is "talk," cheap talk. They have built a freight shed over one of our streets, and propose now to shut one of our much travelled highways, and if we do not like it, they will make a trade with our City Council. Now I think if our Council proposes to trade off our streets without the consent of the taxpayers, it is time some one does some talking. If the Council has the right to trade with the Grand Trunk, there is no telling where it will all end. They might trade the road roller for a locomotive, the city clock for a Pullman car, the fire engine for a snow plough, the park for some lots on the G.T.P.: as from past experiences, Belleville gets a gold brick when they deal with the Grand Trunk.

Yours respectfully,
WILLIAM CURTIS.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus: it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00: trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

Not Guilty of Perjury.

The result of the case against Phillip O. Lott, of Rawdon, who was charged with perjury was that the accused was acquitted. It was alleged that Lott swore falsely in giving evidence in a case tried before Magistrate Flint some days ago. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown and Mr. Williams for Lott.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF METHODISM

A SUCCESSFUL AND PROFITABLE SUMMER SCHOOL AT 12 O'CLOCK POINT.

The delegates sent from the various Epworth Leagues of the Bay of Quinte Conference met in their Second Annual Summer School at 12 O'Clock Point Park from June 23 to 30 for the study of the Bible, Missions and the Sunday School work.

The lectures given and discussions carried on were by the ablest men of Methodism.

Bible study on the prophets and their messages were conducted by Prof. McLaughlin, Victoria University, Toronto.

Rev. Dr. Crews gave a lecture on Sunday School work. The points spoken to were: The art of teaching, Sunday School management, obtaining spiritual results, modern methods of Sunday School work.

Mrs. F. C. Stephenson, of Toronto, gave an address on Missionary Institutes. Her themes were: The Missionary Committees, Monthly Meetings of Committees, Relation of the Missionary Work to the Pastor, Sunday School and Prayer Meeting, Helps and Supplies Available for Committees, and reports of successful work done by Missionary Committees.

Rev. Dr. A. Sutherland, of Toronto, gave a number of addresses on the mission field, and a very instructive talk on the organization and work of the General Mission Board.

Rev. Mr. R. W. Woodsworth, Toronto, gave two most helpful addresses on Systematic Giving.

Miss Platt, of Picton, a returned missionary from Smyrna, Turkey, gave a live talk on her work..

At the last evening of the school our own Mr. William Johnson gave his lecture on Jerusalem and the World's Convention.

Reports by delegates who attended the school will be given at the Epworth League Convention to be held in Bridge Street Church on Monday, the 11th inst.

Passed the Examinations of the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

The results of the examinations of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, held simultaneously in Toronto and at Ontario Business College on the 19th and 20th of May last, are just published. Twenty-five candidates were successful in the Intermediate examinations. Among the successful candidates is Mr. G. A. McClatchie, of the staff of Ontario Business College, who stands eighth in order of merit. Mr. McClatchie is a Belleville boy, and we heartily congratulate him upon this evidence of his knowledge and ability.

Rev. Dr. Crothers Appreciated.

The Peterboro Review says: The new pastor of George Street Methodist Church, Rev. Dr. Crothers, occupied the pulpit at both services yesterday and gave two very instructive addresses. Dr. Crothers is a very plain speaker and speaks with conviction, and we have no hesitation in saying that he will be warmly welcomed by the George street congregation and by the citizens of Peterboro. It is no exaggeration to state that Dr. Crothers created a very favorable impression in both services yesterday and he has already won a place in the hearts of his congregation.

Wedding at Ameliasburg.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, June 29th, at the home of the bride's father, Mr. David H. Delong, when his daughter, Miss Effie J., was united in marriage to Mr. Charles A. Leach, of Wooler. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Metzler. The groom was attended by Mr. Edward F. Gamble and the bride by Miss Blanche DeLong while Miss Lucy L. DeLong acted as flower girl. Many pretty and valuable presents were received. After a sumptuous repast and a very enjoyable social hour, the happy couple left for Toronto, followed by the best wishes of a host of admiring friends.

Re Mumby—Judgment (C.) on appeal by Charity v. Mumby, and Charles J. Mumby from order of Street, J. (3 O.W.R. 146), upon a motion under Rule 938 by the executors of C. H. Mumby, declaring construction of the will of the deceased. After directing payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, he proceeded: "I give, devise, and bequeath all my real and personal estate in manner following; that is to say, to my beloved wife, Margaret Ann Mumby, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for their sole and absolute use and benefit according to the nature and quality thereof, respectively, while the said Margaret Ann Mumby remains my widow. But in case my wife should again marry, I request my executors to sell all my real and personal estate when my youngest child shall come of age, and divide the proceeds between my six younger children." The widow did not marry again and died on 3rd August, 1903, leaving a will by which she devised all her estate to four of the six children mentioned in her husband's will. Street, J., held that the widow took an estate in fee in the realty, and an absolute interest in the personalty which testator owned at the time of his death. Appeal dismissed with costs. G. H. Kilmer for appellants. D. L. McCarthy for official guardian and other parties in the same interest. M. Wright (Belleville) for respondents.

THE FIRST AND BEST.

"Foot Elm" was the first foot remedy sold in Canada. It has stood the test of years, both here and by the troops in South Africa. No remedy to-day can equal it for giving prompt relief to aching, sweaty, sore, tender, blistered, chafed feet. 18 powders 25 cts.

A Great Success.

The "Big Show," which was held in Mr. J. W. Johnston's barn yesterday afternoon was a tremendous success in every respect. After paying all expenses, refreshments, etc., accounts showed the princely sum of 40 cents due each performer. So delighted were they with the enthusiastic response of the public it was decided to share their good fortune with their friends in the Home for the Friendless. Accordingly a collection was taken up, each giving 5 cents, which sum was expended for peppermints and given to their aged friends.

A FOOLHARDY ADVENTURE.

JAMES THOMAS, OF COLBORNE, HAS A NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

A man named James Thomas, who resides near Colborne, yesterday afternoon did a foolhardy trick which might have cost him his life. He was somewhat under the influence of liquor and drove upon the G.T.R. track for some distance and met an express which was going eastward. A collision was inevitable. The rig was struck violently and thrown for some distance. Neither Thomas or the horse were seriously injured, but the buggy was broken to pieces. The man was picked up and brought to the city, but he was able to be sent home this morning. He will not be likely to repeat his experience.

NEW MINISTER CALLED.

CONGREGATION OF ST. ANDREW'S WANT REV. MR. LAIDLAW, OF WOODSTOCK.

A meeting of the congregation of St. Andrew's Church was held last evening for the purpose of considering a call to a minister to become pastor of that church. There were a large number of the church members present. Upon a ballot being taken, Rev. Mr. Laidlaw, of Woodstock, received a majority of the votes cast and he was subsequently made the unanimous choice.

A few weeks ago the Rev. gentleman occupied the pulpit of the church, and he created a very favorable impression. He is a young man and a clever exponent of the scriptures.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

AN UNWILLING WITNESS

Prof. McLeod, G.T.R. Official Timekeeper, Refuses to Answer.

At the Alien Labor Inquiry, Before Judge Winchester, J. M. Shanley, C.E., Spoke Good Words in Favor of Canadian Engineers—Engineer Stephens Showed in Witness Stand That His Memory of Facts Was Bad.

Montreal, July 5.—Judge Winchester opened his court here yesterday, J. M. Shanley, C. E., being the first witness. At the enquiry in Montreal J. R. Stephens had stated that he had made application for American engineers only after he had exhausted every effort to obtain Canadian engineers and Mr. Mowat produced this testimony and asked Mr. Shanley what he thought of the experience of certain men whom he named.

The witness was of opinion, first, that Canadian engineers in sufficient numbers could be obtained; second, that the qualifications of the Canadian engineers would compare favorably with those from the United States; and third, that as a member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers he had never heard that Mr. Stephens had made any application to that society for men.

Mr. Shanley, shown a list of men who had applied for work, recognized many of them as being amply qualified for the position of divisional or district engineer, which is now filled by Mr. Stephens, an American, at a salary of $7,500 per annum. He mentioned the names of the following who would be in his opinion amply qualified for the premier position: Messrs. Massey, Doucet, Mountain, Leonard, Jennings, Lumsden. Mr. Shanley named 18 men who, from his knowledge, would be amply qualified for the position of divisional engineer, which position was worth $4,000 per annum.

An Unwilling Witness.

The next witness was Prof. McLeod of McGill University, who proved, as both Mr. Mowat and the court averred, an unwilling witness. Prof. McLeod refused to answer most of the questions put to him by Mr. Mowat. He declined to mention the names of any members of the Society of Canadian Civil Engineers, of which he was secretary, as being qualified for any position, whether that of chief, or division, or district engineer. He declined to say how many names on the list of membership might possibly have proper qualifications. He refused again and again to say whether the number out of two thousand members might be one hundred or twenty-five or ten who would possess sufficient qualifications.

He was shown a list of men who had applied to the Grand Trunk, and he said he could not tell whether they were qualified or not. He said this, as Mr. Mowat reminded him, without having looked over the complete list. The professor afterwards admitted that he was an employe of the Grand Trunk as official timekeeper.

In the afternoon, Engineer Stephens was called. Witness refused to state if he had been in the Jamieson raid, and he also declined to state why he had left South Africa and his memory failed him entirely when asked about the men to whom he had refused positions in the survey.

C. M. Hays was then asked from what source he had received a list sent to the Government as to the men's nationality, and the general manager replied from Mr. Stephens.

The easiest way to outwit a liar is to tell the truth.

MILITIA FOR STRIKERS

Bared Bayonets Kept Them Back at Sydney, C.B.

Alarmist Report From the Steel Works to the Effect That Bloodshed Is Expected To-day When Non-Union Men Are Introduced Into the Plant—Strikers Make No Secret That They Will Oppose Soldiers.

Sydney, N.S., July 5.—Fifty local militiamen, under command of Major Crowe of the 17th Field Battery, have taken charge of the steel works here.

The march from the barracks to the works was attended by a number of sensational incidents which passed off without troops having to resort to bloodshed.

One Man Faces a Thousand.

One of these was when Gen. Sales Agent Jones of the Steel Company faced a crowd of a thousand strikers with two revolvers and held them at bay until the arrival of the militia.

He and other officials then entered the plant under the protection of the soldiers.

Bloodshed Is Expected.

Trouble and even bloodshed is expected to occur to-day when the Steel Company will attempt to bring a large number of workmen into the plant.

The militia will be on hand to protect them, while the strikers are determined to prevent any non-union men from entering, and have made no secret of their intention to oppose the soldiers.

If the assertions of strikers are to be believed there will be a big strike of coal miners within a week.

THE STRIKE SITUATION.

Sydney, July 5.—(G. N. W. Despatch.)—Trouble ensued yesterday in consequence of the Steel Company's attempt to operate its plant, and the whole strike situation assumed an entirely new phase. At 8 o'clock last night the Sydney Field Battery, under the command of Major Crowe and a portion of No. 5 company of the Argyle Highlanders, with Major Gillis and Capt. McNeil commanding, marched through the streets and took up their station at the various entrances to the works. They will be reinforced this morning by the remaining companies of the infantry.

On the way to the works the military were met at the bridge crossing Muggah's Creek to No. 1 gate by about 700 of the strikers. The crowd was augmented by hundreds of people who had assembled there to view what might prove a struggle between men and soldiers. The men were massed at the end of the bridge, but fell apart when the volunteers marched down the street. On passing through the mass the crowd surged after the troops, and Major Crowe gave the command to turn about and meet the men with fixed bayonets. This done, the crowd fell back, but not until those in advance came near falling on the bayonets.

Excitement at Fever Heat.

Excitement was now at fever heat. The strikers were heaving to and fro, cheering the P.W.A., and giving counter cheers in derision of the military. After the latter had passed over the bridge the excitement subsided and the men dispersed, most of them to take up their stations on picket duty in different parts of the city and in the vicinity of the plant. They were closely watching all avenues leading to the works, as well as the entire water-front, to see that no men are smuggled into the premises. The city was quiet last night, but, hundreds of strikers are patrolling the streets near the works, and further trouble is anticipated in the morning.

The strikers yesterday got beyond the control of the police in the morning when they began to interfere with employes entering the works. They would permit no one to go in, even J. H. Plummer, president of the company, had to run the gauntlet before he was allowed to pass through. Graham Fraser, director of works, was also intercepted.

Blooming Mill Operating.

C. S. Cameron, comptroller of works, was pushed several hundred yards and placed on board a car and told to go home. One of the strikers was arrested and was in course of being taken to town on a car, when the electric car was at once seized by union men and thrown off the track, the man under arrest rescued and the car replaced on the road. As a result of their efforts to start the plant, the company succeeded in getting the blooming mill partly in operation, and they expect to have it as well as at least the rod and wire mills in partial operation this morning when the redcoats will patrol the entire vicinity of the works and will forbid any assembling on the part of the strikers. The officials of neither side would talk for publication.

Mayor Asked For Troops.

Ottawa, July 5.—The Mayor of Sydney last night telegraphed the Minister of Militia asking that troops be called out to protect life and property.

Sir Frederick Borden replied, that all the Mayor had to do to ensure the necessary military protection was to address his request to the district officer commanding, who would forthwith issue an order mobilizing the militia.

Both Let Out of Jail.

Woodstock, July 5.—The arrest of Constable Tisdale on the warrant sworn out by William Swartz for shooting him without justification was quickly followed by his release on bail. Swartz has also been released on bonds furnished by his friends. His wife will probably withdraw the charge of common assault, which was the origin of the whole trouble.

I.C.R. ESTIMATES.

Hon. Henry Emmerson Tackles Dry Details of Government Railway.

Ottawa, July 5.—Hon. Henry Emmerson tackled his estimates yesterday afternoon, and for two and a half hours wearied the House with dry details of revenues and expenditures upon the Intercolonial Railway.

Decreased revenues and increased expenditures was the burden of his dirge. After 8 o'clock, in committee of supply, the estimates were taken up in detail and Mr. Emmerson was submitted to a severe heckling by the Opposition, who have not forgotten his share in the conspiracy of silence during the Grand Trunk Pacific debate.

He said that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, the earnings of the road were $6,324,323 and the working expenses $6,195,653, giving a surplus of $127,670. For the previous year the earnings were $5,671,385 and the expenses $5,574,563. The earnings of the passenger traffic for 1903 were $1,937,916, as compared with $1,770,491 for the year 1902. The freight earnings for the same two years were $4,128,255 and $3,644,513 respectively.

Expenses Have Increased.

As an explanation of why the working expenses have increased, Mr. Emmerson pointed out that the wages of the engineers and firemen have gone up $26,184 for the same number of men, the price of fuel has risen $67,678 and other things in proportion. The wages of conductors and baggagemen had been considerably increased. A very large item of expenditure was for maintenance of way, but it was justified by the excellent condition of the road, and was in no way due to increase in salaries. Mr. Emmerson said he could not paint any very glowing picture of the Intercolonial finances during the past year. However, it was his duty to explain the differences, and it would be for the House to determine the cause after he had presented the facts.

Deficit For 1904.

Not having the details for the full year of 1904, Mr. Emmerson took the ten months ended April 30 and compared it with the corresponding period of 1903. He showed that the working expenses in the ten months of 1903 were $5,288,763, receipts $5,292,639, surplus $3,876. In the ten months of 1904 the expenses were $5,835,294, receipts $5,287,521, a deficit of $547,772. That is the expenses had increased $546,530, while the receipts decreased $5,118. To account for the increased expenditure, Mr. Emmerson pointed out that the expenditure on betterments, such as repairs to engines and cars and upkeep of tracks, was $2,156,043 in the ten months of 1904, an increase of $121,254, while last winter it cost $40,083 more for snow-cleaning than in the previous winter, although the mileage had only been increased by 15 per cent.

Coming to the capital expenditure, the minister said that in 1896 it amounted to $259,105; in 1897 to $149,112; in 1898 to $252,756; in 1899, to $1,081,921; in 1900, to $1,796,348; in 1901, to $3,652,213; in 1902 to $4,670,599 and in 1903, to $2,216,744.

Next the committee took up the estimate of $4,511,000 capital expenditure on the I.C.R. for 1904-5. Mr. Emmerson said that the original estimate of cost of strengthening bridges on the Intercolonial outside of Cape Breton, was $1,759,000, so that with what had been expended and the estimate of $385,000 for next year, there would be at least $280,000 more required to complete the work. This item was allowed to stand for detailed information as to the bridges to be repaired.

The statement of the appeals of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick and the reply of the Federal Government were laid before the House yesterday.

A motion that the Railway Committee meet at the same time as the morning session of the House was carried on division.

Mr. Fitzpatrick introduced a couple of bills in amendment of the Dominion Elections and the Representation Acts.

A number of private bills, including three divorce bills, passed their third reading.

The House adjourned at midnight.

Fish Diet Bad For the Voice.

Fine voices, it is said, are seldom found in a country where fish or meat diet prevails. Those Italians who eat the most fish (those of Naples and Genoa) have few fine singers among them. The sweet voices are found in the Irish women of the country, and not of the towns. Norway is not a country of singers, because they eat too much fish, but Sweden is a country of grain and song. The carnivorous birds croak; grain eating birds sing.

For Hubby's Eyes.

Shopman—You want a nice motto to hang up in the house, ma'am? How would "Heaven Bless Our Home" or "No Place Like Home" do? Severe Looking Lady—Wouldn't do at all. What I want is a card to hang up in the hall bearing the words "Better Late Than Never."

Why Is This So?

A father of four boys has discovered that different sounds travel with different velocity.

A call to dinner, he says, will carry over a ten acre field in a minute and a half, while a summons to return to work takes from five to eight minutes.—Chums.

Still Able to Attend to Business.

"I told Uncle Simon that he was getting too old and feeble to attend to business."

"Did he take it kindly?"

"He threw me out of his office."

Prescott's Wagers.

Rollo Ogden, in his biography of William H. Prescott, the historian, cites many passages from the diary showing Prescott's habit of flogging himself to his work by making wagers with his secretaries that he would complete a given task by a certain day, the odds always heavily against himself. "Prescott always took this betting on his own industry with perfect seriousness. Sometimes he would radiantly greet his secretary with: 'You have lost! You owe me a dollar.' And he would exact payment. Occasionally he would, with woebegone countenance, produce and pay over to the protesting secretary the $20 or $50 he himself had lost." One elaborately made memorandum witnesses that a bet of $1 to $50 had been made "between E. B. Otis and William H. Prescott, Esq., the latter betting $50 that he will write 100 pages of his 'History of Peru' in 100 days." The document is signed William H. Prescott and Edmund B. Otis, but the latter subjoins the following: "I promise on my honor as a gentleman not to release Mr. Prescott from any forfeiture that may incur, except in such cases as are provided for in the contract—this contract being made at his desire for his own accommodation only."

We advise everybody to use Sunlight Soap—
It makes child's play of work.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

We have used "Sunlight Soap," and we want to tell you that it is the best soap made, that's why we are writing. We found out that the Sunlight way is the best way to wash with "Sunlight Soap." At first we used to wash with Sunlight Soap in the old way as we did with common soap, but after we washed according to directions printed on the package, we would never wash the old way again. We first soap the articles, leave them to soak and then rub out lightly on the wash board. Not much to do and it makes the clothes white as snow.

ASK FOR THE OCTAGON BAR

Sunlight Soap washes the clothes white and won't injure the hands.

STRICTURES Cured To Stay Cured

Strictures, no matter where located, are apt to involve the surrounding structures. If neglected or improperly treated, urethral stricture will produce distressing symptoms. Cutting, stretching and tearing are the old barbarous methods of treating this disease. The strictly modern and original methods employed by us are free from the horrors of surgery and are absolutely safe and harmless. The abnormal stricture tissue is disolved and leaves the channel free and clear. All unnatural discharges cease, any irritation or burning sensation disappears, the Kidneys, Bladder, Prostate Gland and other surrounding organs are strengthened and the bliss of manhood returns. Our ABSORPTIVE TREATMENT will positively cure you. YOU CAN PAY WHEN CURED.

We Cure Varicocele, Blood and Skin Diseases, Nervous Debility, Strictures, Bladder, Kidney and Urinary Diseases.

FIXED THEIR MAJORITY.

British Government Applies Closure in the Commons.

London, July 6.—The Government Monday night carried through Premier Balfour's closure proposal, under which business will be transacted for the remainder of the session of the House of Commons, by a majority of 80, despite the heated denunciations of members of the Opposition.

Disorderly scenes without precedent took place in the lobbies, which were invaded by the public and by deputations seeking to influence members to vote against the Government. The police, which were reinforced, finally forced the crowd into the open air court-yard adjoining the House.

Will Sit in August.

Ottawa, July 6.—George F. Shepley, K.C., of Toronto, and Judge Davidson of Montreal, have been appointed by the Dominion Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, respectively, to adjudicate upon the differences that have arisen in connection with the operations of the sections of line between Rosalie and St. Lambert and empowered to call witnesses and take evidence. The arbitrators will sit some time in August.

Take Motien Pass and Fenshun Pass Without Resistance.

Japanese Seriously Menacing Liaoyang and Kuropatkin Contemplates Further Fight to the North—Russians Officially Admit 200 Killed and Wounded in Fight Between Motien and Fenshun Passes--Baron Near Death

Tokio, July 5.—Gen. Kuroki has occupied Motien Pass without resistance. The Russians have abandoned Tsinshanqwan, burning the supplies. A detachment of General Kuroki's army has occupied North Fenshun Pass without meeting with resistance. The main army advanced westward and occupied a line extending from Motien Pass to the Shaomotien and Sinkai Passes.

Russians Admit 200 Lost.

St. Petersburg, July 6.—Thirteen companies of Russian troops sent out by Lieut.-General Count Keller in a reconnaissance in force to ascertain the strength of the Japanese column's advance force moving on Liaoyang came into collision with the Japanese between Motien and Fenshun Passes yesterday. Sharp fighting ensued, and the Russians retired before overwhelming numbers after ascertaining the exact strength of the Japanese forces. The Russian losses are officially stated to be two hundred. In case the information obtained by Gen. Keller leads General Kuropatkin to consider that Liaoyang is seriously threatened it is probable that some of the troops will return north from Tatchekiao. Then the Japanese are likely to repeat their attempt to recapture Newchwang.

Kuropatkin Reports Losses.

St. Petersburg, July 6.—The general staff has received a despatch from Lieut.-Gen. Sakharoff, the chief of staff of Gen. Kuropatkin, dated July 4, in which occurs the following:

"In the engagement yesterday, our casualties were: Col. Letschitsky, bruised and wounded; Col. Popelow, Lieut.-Col. Trakemovsky, Capt. Solieff, Lieuts. Maroff, Latkine, Bebroslavsky and Kozine, Second Captain Paly and several other officers wounded and 200 soldiers killed or wounded. All the wounded were removed."

Russians Three Times Repulsed.

Tokio, July 5.—General Kuroki reports that two battalions of Russians attacked the Japanese outposts at Maotien Pass at dawn on July 4, under cover of a dense fog. The Russians were repulsed, but they returned and charged three times before they were finally driven off. The Japanese pursued them for three miles to the westward of Maotien Pass. The Russians left thirty dead and fifty wounded on the field. The Japanese lost 15 killed and 30 wounded.

Japs Occupy the Pass.

Tokio, July 5.—A detachment of Gen. Kuroki's army has occupied North Fenshun Pass without meeting with resistance.

Baron Near Death.

Tatchekiao, July 6.—Lieut.-General Baron Stakelberg narrowly escaped drowning yesterday, owing to the sudden flooding of the headquarters of the army corps. He was rescued by soldiers.

Through the Bosphorus.

Constantinople, July 6.—The Russian volunteer fleet steamers St. Petersburg and Sebastopol passed through the Bosphorus from the Black Sea yesterday morning. The Sebastopol was flying the red cross flag and her hull was painted white. The vessels took on board a quantity of stores and remained in the harbor until last evening.

KILL 1,000 ACHINESE.

Many Women and Children Slain By Dutch Troops in East Indies.

Amsterdam, July 6.—A despatch from Batavia, capital of the Dutch East Indies, says that the commander of the expedition to North Achin, northern Sumatra, attacked Likat on June 20. The Achinese losses were 432 killed, including 281 women and children, and 54 wounded; 17 prisoners were taken.

The Dutch casualties included the commander, a lieutenant, two sergeants and 13 soldiers wounded.

On June 23 the Dutch troops attacked Tangat Bars when the Achinese losses were 654 killed, including 188 women and 130 children and 49 wounded. Twenty-eight prisoners were taken.

The Dutch losses were a captain, 122 soldiers and six coolies wounded.

No Thibetan Overtures.

New York, July 6.—No Thibetan overtures were made Monday, says a despatch from The London Times correspondent at Gyangtse. The Thibetans were reported to be at work building on the rear face of the Jong.

If no answer was returned by yesterday the armistice terminates, and a signal gun will announce the fact. Half an hour's further grace for the removal of the women and non-combatants will follow.

Newfoundland's Revenue.

St. John's, Nfld., July 6.—The revenue of Newfoundland for the fiscal year, which ended June 30, reaches $2,100,000, an increase of nearly $100,000 over last year. Notwithstanding the remission of duties during the past quarter, equaling another $100,000, it is expected that the surplus over the expenditure for the fiscal year will approach $250,000.

Libelled For $70,000.

Montreal, July 6.—The steamer Cape Breton has been libeled by the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Company on account of the loss of the latter's steamer Canada, but it has put up bonds to the extent of $70,000.

STARTLING DISCLOSURES PROMISED.

Government Will Have Commission Investigate Sudbury Irregularities.

Toronto, July 6.—The alleged licensing irregularities in Sudbury, in connection with John Bidgood's Hotel, and subsequent to which the resignation of Dr. Henderson from the licensing board was accepted, are to be made the subject of enquiry by the Government.

A commission is to be issued to the Provincial Licensing Inspector, and the enquiry will be held within the next two weeks.

A Sudbury correspondent states that a searching investigation will result in startling disclosures.

A TRYING MEAL.

The Fine Flavor of the Jam Came From a Moving Source.

In Mr. Julian Hawthorne's "Hawthorne and His Circle" is the story of an experience which will doubtless be appreciated by many housekeepers who have suffered similar agony, if not from precisely the same cause.

One night during Mr. Hawthorne's term as consul at Liverpool his friend, Mr. Henry Bright, the water color artist, came to an informal supper, and Mrs. Hawthorne, in honor of her guest, placed upon the table a jar of especially fine raspberry jam.

Mr. Bright tasted the jam and at once became enthusiastic. He had never eaten any so delicious, he declared. There was a peculiar tang about it which surpassed his recollections of any jam he had ever tasted from boyhood up. He was still in the midst of his rhapsodies and still consuming their subject with enthusiasm when Mrs. Hawthorne, who had taken a little of the jam upon her own plate, made a ghastly discovery. The cover of the jam pot had evidently got ajar in the closet, and an innumerable army of almost microscopic ants had discovered the treasure and plunged eagerly into it.

What color the invading enemy may have been before they became incorporated with the jam nobody knew. At the time of the discovery they could be distinguished only by their struggles with the pervasive stickiness, and only then by the keenest eyes, and the eyes of Henry Bright were among the most nearsighted in England.

What was to be done? Mr. and Mrs. Hawthorne stealthily exchanged "one awful look," and the question was settled. It was too late to recall the ants devoured by thousands; it was clearly one of the cases where ignorance was bliss. Mr. Bright accompanied his meal with a "continual psalm" in praise of the exquisite flavor of the raspberry jam, and never to the day of his death did he discover the awful secret of that flavor.

A Delicate Refusal.

Levassor, the well known French comic singer, once took part in a charity concert in Paris and after the performance was invited by the promoters to supper along with the rest of the performers. When all were seated at table Levassor found under his napkin an Easter egg out of which five pieces of gold dropped on its being broken.

"Ah, I perceive you have got to know that I am fond of boiled eggs," the comedian gayly remarked to his entertainer, "but you are probably not aware that I only eat the white and must therefore ask you to give the yolk to the poor."

Suspected Fractures.

When a fracture is suspected, do not move the patient unless absolutely necessary until a good surgeon can be secured. Meanwhile keep the injured part perfectly motionless and as comfortable as possible by propping up with pillows or pads made of rolls of cloth. Make cold applications to keep down the swelling where there is localized pain.

To give up of your own will what would cost too much in time and strength is not failure—it is success.

Daily Intelligencer.

CARE FOR THE VOLUNTEERS.

The last militia order issued and signed by Lord Dundonald shows the practical character knowledge he has of his duties, and the thoughtful care he has for the comfort of the men. The order reads thus:

"Commanders of squadrons and captains of companies shall also make it their business to see that their men are as comfortable as circumstances permit, and that the cooking arrangements and the place in which the food is kept are as perfect as circumstances will allow. They should also report anything which is wrong with the food or anything which they consider might be done to make the men more comfortable.

Commenting upon this wise and thoughtful instruction, the Ottawa Citizen sarcastically remarks:

"This is a heavy blow at responsible Government. It actually interferes with the right of the responsible Minister to serve the troops with emergency rations. What right has a "foreigner" thus to dragoon the Ottawa politicians and to introduce militarism into the country?"

A GROWING TIME.

NOW $70,267,541, AS AGAINST $38,000,000.

Still running up! Another supplementary estimate has been laid upon the table of the House of Commons, to cover over expenditure of 1903-04, amounting to $1,865,639.30, thus bringing the total appropriation for the current fiscal year up to the enormous sum of $70,267,541!!! And the end is not yet. The total expenditure in 1896, the last year of Conservative administration, was in the neighborhood of $38,000,000. The increase under the Liberal Government, which professed economy, in seven years, is OVER $32,000,000. Honest Liberals, think of it.

Is not this a growing time, at least in public expenditure?

Objecting to the crowd which attended its sale at Kew, near Melbourne, recently, an African grey parrot repeatedly told the auctioneer to "Shut up," and "Go home sober," but otherwise would say nothing. The bird is a marvellous talker, repeating nursery rhymes, Shakespearian quotations and singing "Where are the Boys of the Old Brigade?" and two other songs. It was eagerly competed for, and eventually was sold for £42. The bird greeted its purchaser with the remark, "Does your mother know you're out?"

Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman, as her stories show, believes that excellence in art lies in simplicity.

An enthusiastic young girl visited Mrs. Wilkins-Freeman recently, and read aloud a story she had written. The noted writer's comment on this story was:

"It should have been done more simply. Only by being simple, by being direct, you can be sure of achieving your effect. With roundabout, subtle methods, you are never positive that you will not fail.

"I saw this fact well demonstrated during a parade in Boston. A man was watching this parade, when another man crowded in front of him. The first wanted the other to get out of the way, but instead of asking him to do so in a simple, plain way, he said:

"'You are not opaque, are you?'

"'No, sir. O'Brien,' the other man replied, politely. 'O'Brien is me name, sir.'"

A Pair of Slippers

By W. W. Hines

Copyright, 1903, by W. W. Hines

"But, sweetheart, you are not going to be jealous of a girl I never saw, a girl who probably never existed? Remember that I never heard anything but her voice, and it is quite possible that she was as homely as original sin."

Tom Riker was provoked. Theoretically he held that in every love affair there should be some temporary obstacle to the happiness of the lovers. These temporary obstacles not only gave spice to the love affairs themselves, but they afforded hardworking novelists like himself a fair chance to earn a living. Now he was finding a lifetime of theory deftly upset by a few moments of practice. His courtship of and engagement to Anne Lorrimer had been a very commonplace affair, but he was so much in love that he could not see the advantage of obstacles, temporary or otherwise. They had met at the summer resort and were thrown together constantly from the first meeting by relatives and friends, who had promptly decided that the match would be a good one. Now the inevitable rift in the lute had appeared in Anne's jealousy of the heroine whom Riker had painted in his newest and most successful book, "A Pair of Slippers."

"Of course she may have been homely and all that," said Anne, with an air of dissatisfaction, "but you didn't paint her as homely. You gave her, with a lavish hand, all the graces and beauties that a woman could possess, and—what is especially galling to me—you described her as just the opposite to me in every way. I can't help but think that she represented your ideal."

"Now, my dear little girl, don't be foolish. Just remember that when I described her I had never met you. I made her a brunette because that seemed to fit in with her contralto voice. I'll make you a solemn promise that from this time henceforth all my heroines shall have golden hair and the deepest and truest of blue eyes. Her voice was excellent, but it was absolutely untrained, and I infinitely prefer to listen to your high, clear soprano than to any number of contraltos, no matter how rich and full is the quality of their voice."

"I HURLED IT ACROSS WITH ALL MY FORCE."

"That's all very well, but you say that some of the incidents in the book had a foundation in truth. Suppose you met this woman some time?" asked Anne.

"What difference would it make if I did? You don't suppose that I will ever have eyes or ears for any other woman but yourself, do you? I'll tell you just how much of the plot had a foundation in truth.

"When I was ill in the spring I occupied a room in one of the uptown hospitals, and, despite the calls of my friends, time hung very heavily on my hands. My nurse was one of those efficient machines which school and hospital training turn out, and I was ready to turn to anything for relaxation and entertainment. Just across the areaway from my window was an apartment house, and I used to hear some one singing there and would close my eyes and listen to the music. One day some of my friends had brought me a magnificent clump of lilies of the valley, and it occurred to me that it would be nice to send some of them to the girl who made the music. I knew that it would be useless to try to enlist the services of my matter of fact nurse in trying to find out her name, so I determined on another plan. I had never seen the girl, but the voice seemed to float out of a window just opposite me.

"I was becoming convalescent rapidly, and, casting about for something to weight the bouquet with, my eyes fell on a pair of slippers. I stuck the flowers in the toe of one of the slippers and hurled it across with all my force. I saw it sail in the window, and then, the exertion proving too much for me, I fainted and fell on the floor by the window. I had counted on seeing the girl pick up the flowers, but I fainted too quickly.

"I was removed to another room, which looked out on an inner court, and I never heard the voice again. I recovered from the relapse quickly, and while I was in bed I blocked out the synopsis of my romance. The hero, as you know, I made an art student in Paris and had him fall in love with a girl across the way on account of the girl's voice. He threw her flowers just as I did, and they got to know each other in that way.

"But both the young artist and the young singer were poor. They drifted away from Paris and lost the sight, but not the memory, of each other. Ten years later the artist, now on the top wave of success, went to hear a new opera sung by a new prima donna of whom great things are told. The prima donna turns out to be 'the girl at the other window.' The artist rushes out of the opera house, buys some lilies of the valley and a pair of slippers, sticks the flowers into the toe of one of the slippers and hurls it on the stage. She recognizes him by the sign. They marry and live happy ever afterward. And that's all there is to the little story which the critics jumped on me for giving such a prosaic title as 'A Pair of Slippers.'"

"And you are sure that if you met the girl to whom you threw the flowers you would never be tempted to try to turn your romance into reality?" asked Anne.

"I have enough romance to last me for a lifetime."

"But suppose the girl was really a very nice girl and a very pretty girl?"

"Makes no difference."

"Did you know that I lived in the apartment house back of the hospital at which you were a patient?" Anne's expression was rather mischievous.

"No, I didn't. Then it is possible that you know the woman with the contralto voice. Do you?"

"Yes, I knew her. In fact, I have the slipper and the bunch of lilies of the valley."

"How did you get them? Your voice is soprano."

Anne's expression was distinctly mischievous now. In fact, she seemed to have great difficulty in keeping from laughing outright as she said:

"The woman you heard singing was our old negro cook, whom we brought up from the south with us. I had to take the flowers and slipper off her hands to pacify her. She was going over to the hospital to raise a row on the presumption that the negro janitor had tried to flirt with her. I put the flowers and slipper out of her way, and she finally forgot about them, and so did I. When I read your book it started me to thinking, and when I met you I determined to find out if it was really you who threw the flowers. So you need not worry any more about my jealousy."

"I think," said Tom slowly, "that the joke is decidedly on me."

"Undoubtedly," said Anne. "But if you had not thrown the flowers you wouldn't have written the book, and if you had not written the book I would not have gone out of my way to meet you. So 'all's well that ends well.'"

A Miracle to Order.

In the days of his youth M. Coquelin was ambitious, and the parts he loved to play were those in which he died in full view of an appreciative audience for his art. He had one of these roles one evening at the Boulogne theater and played it splendidly, getting a ringing round of applause as he fell dead upon the stage. Then his troubles started.

The audience's applause woke up a mosquito, which applied itself to M. Coquelin with so much assiduity that the corpse felt it must either scream or scratch. Another actor, who played a general in the corps of which the dead M. Coquelin was a young ensign, was standing near the body and had to say: "See, then, how sad a thing is war! But now this youth was living. Now he is dead—motionless for all time! Nothing save a miracle can give him life again!"

But M. Coquelin could hold out no longer. The mosquito was still biting busily and Coquelin had to sit up and slap his leg. "The miracle has happened!" cried the general, while the audience laughed until it cried at this too lively corpse.

Verdi's Regret.

Mr. Le Quex tells a pretty story of Verdi's modesty. His father was an intimate friend of the great maestro, and the novelist in his youthful days used to visit him at his palace at Genoa. One evening they were alone in the great musician's private study, having dined together, when the servant entered with the post. Among the letters was a roll of music, which, on being opened, proved to be a new waltz by a Viennese composer, who had dedicated it to the great master of the opera. Verdi first hummed it to himself, swaying his head the time, and afterward, seating himself at the piano, played it off. Then, having finished, the man whose works had charmed the world and brought in colossal royalties, turned to the young novelist, and, sighing, said: "Ah! How I wish I could write popular music like that!"

Art is the work of man under the guidance and inspiration of a mightier power.—Hare.

For Love of Amy....

By A. S. Richardson

Copyright, 1903, by A. S. Richardson

"No, it could not possibly be a question of money. I know, of course, that your business affairs are so arranged that if you never did a stroke of work in your life you could live in luxurious fashion unless our government was overturned or some similar catastrophe revolutionized the financial world."

"And yet?"

"That is just the trouble. It is because you would never have to work—never have to do for yourself or for me—that I cannot say 'yes.'"

"But wouldn't it be enough just to make you happy, to give you all that I had to give, to go with you the world over and enjoy life with you, to be devoted to you?"

Harry Watkins did not change his lazy, easy position stretched at Amy Morgan's feet, but his voice was strangely tense and earnest.

BESIDE HER, WITH HIS HAND ON THE CRANK, STOOD A STALWART MAN.

"No. That would be all play and no work, and men weary of all play as well as all work."

"That is the first time I ever heard that it was mere child's play to please a woman and make her contented."

His tone was bantering, but Amy's face did not soften with mirth.

"You do not understand. I must marry a man who I think is a stronger nature than myself, a man to whom I can look up. My father, like most self made men, has his rough edges, but he commands a certain respect which I want also to give to my husband. He is so completely the master of the situation. He did not buy his position as president of the Consolidated Interurban railway. He earned it step by step from the day when he was first given a car to oil."

Harry Watkins was not smiling now. His eyes were narrowing to a mere slit of clear gray, and his glance was fixed on the Berkshire hills rising magnificently on their right, bathed now in richest September sunset. Suddenly he turned and took both of her slim, graceful hands in his.

"Amy"—it was the first time he had ever used her first name, and her hands trembled slightly in his—"Amy, dear, if I ever should come to you with the fruits of genuine effort in my hands could you"—

And, looking into her smiling eyes, he read the answer he wanted.

The next day the Dearborn house party broke up. Harry Watkins joined a yachting party bound for the Maine coast, and Amy Morgan turned her face toward her home in the midwest. There has been no promise of a correspondence. And yet both were content.

• • • • • • •

It came out in huge black type:

"Our generous townsman, James Forbes Morgan, president of the Consolidated Interurban railway, has granted to the young women of St. James' church the use of his road to Lake View for the afternoon of July 4, the proceeds from car fares to be donated to the victims of the Cherry Hill mine disaster. The young women of the Altar guild will have charge of the work and act as conductors during the afternoon. Individuals who will not find it convenient to patronize the road on that day may send checks payable to Miss Amy Morgan, treasurer of the guild."

And it certainly seemed when the afternoon arrived that all Centerville was bound for Lake View. The superintendent and his assistants held a hurried conference, and it was decided that the regular conductors who had anticipated a day off should be pressed into service to assist the young women acting as conductors, and an emergency call was sent out for the men to report at once.

Amy Morgan sat in the auditor's office receiving the reports as each car returned from its trip to the lake, her enthusiasm rising as the afternoon waned. At 6 o'clock the cars were to be turned back to the company, and it was just 5:30 when the telephone in the superintendent's room rang with that peculiar insistence which presages trouble.

"Riot imminent at Dobson's corner," was the news. "Gang of toughs have taken possession of car No. 527; motorman thrown off; badly injured."

"Don't tell Amy," was her father's first order as he closed the door leading into the auditor's room. He had been at his daughter's elbow all afternoon.

"Rioters in possession; have run car out of town. Send police to head them off."

So the car was headed for Centerville, that was one comfort, but there were ugly curves to make and two sharp inclines, which unaccustomed hands, unsteady from liquor, might fail to accomplish. Probably few passengers were on board, but there was the pretty girlish conductor in charge, Jessica Wallace, one of Amy's dearest friends. Anxiety was written on every face.

"What conductor is helping out Miss Wallace?"

"Watkins, that new chap who has been working in the repair shop. We've been using him extra. He can handle the car if he doesn't lose his head."

Mr. Morgan looked relieved, but there was no keeping it from Amy. Long before the car could be heard tearing down the incline leading to the barns she had read trouble in the faces around her and demanded the truth. So she stood, with straining gaze and tight clasped hand, as the great motor car used for suburban service came plunging into view. On the front platform stood a slender, girlish figure, waving her hat as a signal of their safety. Beside her, with his arm on the gleaming brass crank, stood a stalwart, bareheaded man. On the floor of the car lay, prone and silent, two battered toughs. The rest had been dropped along the line. A gesticulating, shouting crowd of employees surrounded the car as it pulled up with a jerk, but Amy saw just one figure in the dramatic picture—the man who bent, with calm, smiling eyes, above the brass crank.

• • • • • • • •

"I meant to offer you something better as the fruits of my apprenticeship in your father's trade than a disabled car and two victims of my old lessons in bag punching. But Fate has her own way of pushing the good work on."

"I never knew that Fate could be so kind, father."

They were standing in her father's private office, screened from the excited throngs in the yards, but her father had suddenly disappeared. She looked at his vacant chair, then back to young Watkins' dancing eyes.

"He knew—you two"—

"Are a very good pair to draw to. Amy, it was the only way to win you, and now I want my promised reward."

Without a word she held out her hands, and he drew her close with his dusty blue coat sleeves around her dainty summer gown, and his classic features, still grimy from the terrific onslaught and ride, hidden in her soft, chestnut hair.

Hoist With His Own Petard.

Charles Thompson, secretary to the first American congress, once boarded in the family of a schoolteacher named Dove. This man Dove was a humorist, and in his school, instead of whipping an offensive pupil, he made him ridiculous in the eyes of his schoolmates. The birch was stuck into the back part of the collar of the culprit, who, with this badge of disgrace, was made to stand upon the platform.

If boys were late in arriving at school a committee of five or six scholars was sent into the streets, with a bell and lighted lantern, to hunt up the delinquents and escort them to the schoolhouse.

One day the scholars enjoyed the sport mentioned in Hamlet—"to have the engineer hoist by his own petard." Dove had always professed a willingness to have his own punishment meted out to himself in case he transgressed the rules.

One morning the teacher was late, and a committee of boys, with bell and lantern, meeting him on his way to school, escorted him through the streets, to the amusement of the spectators. He had the good sense to submit quietly.

A Story of Werner von Siemens.

A curious story is told in the autobiographical "Memoirs" of the great German electrical engineer, Werner von Siemens. When he was engaged laying the first telegraph cable between Verviers and Cologne, about the year 1850, a lady came to him and told him with many tears how his telegraph threatened with utter ruin the business of her husband, who had for years carried on a very successful pigeon post between Brussels and Aix-la-Chapelle and was now broken hearted at the gloomy prospect before him.

Siemens strongly advised the young couple to roast their pigeons and promised his assistance if they went to London and started a news agency. This the young man, who was then Herr Reuter, the founder of the telegraphic business which goes by his name, proceeded to do and in a few years became a rich man, a baron and indeed a power in Europe.

Billy and His Ancestors.

Billy lived in the alley. One evening he was vigorously pounding a smaller boy he had inveigled from the street. His grandmother came out and sharply bade him "let up on that little fellow." As she turned into the house Billy, hanging on to his victim with one hand, executed a lively war dance, saying contemptuously when she was safely out of hearing: "Old Injun squaw! Old Injun squaw!"

"Wha'cher call 'er that fer?" asked the smaller boy, interested at once.

"Cuz she is one. Don'cher know her an' gran'pap both has Injun blood in 'em?"

"How about yourself, then, Bill?" sneered the other.

"Huh! I'll lecher know there hain't no Injun blood in me. It's just granny an' gran'pap's got it." With a yell that would have done credit to a Comanche on the warpath, he proceeded to wipe the earth with his victim.—New York Tribune.

THE DAGUERREOTYPE.

Odd Notions Concerning the Process When It Was New.

Many amusing remarks were made at the doors of daguerreotype galleries when they were first opened in this country. A small frame containing a dozen specimens would draw a crowd. One man would undertake to describe how they were made. "You look in the machine, and the picture comes—if you look long enough." Another would say: "It is not so much the looking that does it. The sun burns it in if you keep still." Another made it all very plain by stating, "The plate is a looking glass, and when you sit in front of it your shadow sticks on the plate."

How it came about was never known, but the impression became general that the sitter must not wink. No operator of intelligence ever told the sitter not to wink, for the effort to refrain would have given the eye an unnatural expression. We found it a duty to tell the sitter to wink as usual; that natural winking did not affect the picture. Even then it was not always understood. One old lady jumped out of the chair before a sitting was half over, raising both hands and exclaiming: "Stop it, stop it! I winked!"

Another remarkable fact was that sitters seldom acknowledged their own likenesses. "All good but mine," was the common decision. An aged couple after examining their pictures came to this conclusion, "Maria, yours is perfect, but this does not look like me." But the old lady answered, "Jeems, yours is as natural as life, but mine is a failure." After a longer consultation the old gentleman said, "We must know each other better than we know ourselves." At one time when Daniel Webster sat for a daguerreotype the finished picture was held before him. Turning away, he said: "I am not to judge of my own looks. It is for you to judge, and you must decide whether the work is worthy of your reputation."—A. Bogardus in Century.

MISTAKES IN LIFE.

Brooding Over Them Is Useless and Unprofitable Work.

One of the most unprofitable ways of spending time is the practice, to which many persons are addicted, of brooding over the mistakes one has made in life and thinking what he might have been or achieved if he had not done at certain times just what he did do. Almost every unsuccessful man in looking over his past career is inclined to think that it would have been wholly different but for certain slips and blunders—certain hasty, ill considered acts into which he was betrayed almost unconsciously and without a suspicion of their consequences.

As he thinks of all the good things of this world—honor, position, power and influence—of which he has been deprived in some mysterious, inexplicable way, he has no patience with himself, and as it is painful and humiliating to dwell long upon one's own follies it is fortunate if he does not implicate others—friends and relatives—in his disappointments. Perhaps, as education has never been free from mistakes—mistakes indeed of every kind—he imputes the blame to his early training, in which habits of thoroughness and accuracy or, again, of self reliance and independence of thought may not have been implanted. Perhaps a calling was chosen for him by his parents without regard to his peculiar talents or tastes and preferences, or if he was allowed to choose for himself it was when his judgment was immature and unfit for the responsibility. The result was that the square man got into the round hole or the triangular man got into the square hole or the round man squeezed himself into the triangular hole.—Success.

A Hard Critic.

A clergyman was rebuked by one of the ruling elders for sauntering on the Sunday along the hillside above the manse. The clergyman took the rebuke in good part, but tried to show the remonstrant that the action of which he complained was innocent and lawful, and he was about to cite the famous example of a Sabbath walk, with the plucking of the ears of corn, as set forth in the gospels, when he was interrupted with the remark, "Ou aye, sir, I ken weel what you mean to say, but for my pairt I hae nefer thocht the better o' them for breakin' the Sawbbath." — Geikie's "Scotch Reminiscences."

The Kangaroo Rat.

One of the queerest little animals of the antipodean wilds of the paradoxical continent of Australia is a little zoological oddity which the naturalists have called the kangaroo rat. It averages no larger than the common rodent of the Norway variety, but is a miniature kangaroo in every respect. Its mode of locomotion is precisely the same as that of Macropus giganteus. Besides this, the female carries its young in pouches which nature has provided for that purpose and in many other respects imitates the habits and characteristics of its gigantic relative.

No Room For Doubt.

"Oh, my, yes, he's away up in Shakespeare."

"Is he? I shouldn't have guessed that he had ever read a line of Shakespeare."

"That's strange. Haven't you noticed that every little while he says 'in sooth?'"

A Little Inclined to It Himself.

Towne—There's nothing I hate so much as a lazy man. Browne—Well, I wish there were more of them. Towne—You do? Browne—Sure. The more lazy men there are the less competition we'd have in business.—Philadelphia Press.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Billious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) question, she stepped to a closet, brought him a small unframed picture and added, "There is one I have just finished."

Uncle Terry

It was a view of a tall cliff with a low shelf of rock at its base, over which the waves were breaking. Albert recognized it at once. "Why, that is the very point," he exclaimed, "that I was sketching yesterday when my boat drifted away. Did you paint it from a broad flat rock on the west side of the cove?"

"Oh, yes, that is the spot," replied Telly, looking pleased. "It is shady there, and I used to row up and paint in the afternoon. It is strange you went to the same place. Father told me about finding you," she said, "and that you were turned around. You must have had a hard tramp, for it's all of two miles from where you were to this cove, and an awful tangle all the way, he said."

"I was decidedly turned when he came to my rescue," Albert replied, "and the sun seemed to be setting in the east. It was very kind of your father to take care of me the way he has, and I shall never forget it."

It is not hard for two young people of opposite sex to get acquainted when each desires to entertain the other and they have at least one well defined taste in common. Albert did not talk much, but adroitly induced Telly to do most of it. In the hour they passed together, he discovered that two impulses were nearest her heart—the first and strongest her devotion to Uncle Terry, and after that a desire to paint.

"I do not ever hope to do much," she admitted rather pathetically. "I never have taken lessons and maybe never shall. I would not think of asking father to let me go away, and all I can do is to work blindly. I often sit for hours trying to put things I see on canvas, only to fail utterly and begin all over again. I should not mind it if I could see that I made any progress, but I do not. I can't let it alone, though, for the most happy hours I have are when I'm painting."

"You certainly have perseverance," responded Albert encouragingly, "and the pictures you have shown me seem very lifelike. I wish I could do as well. You have done good work for one self taught as you are, and you have no reason to be discouraged."

Then Uncle Terry came in and announced dinner. It was rather a state affair for the Terry household, and the table bore their best dinner service, with a vase of flowers in the center.

"I hope ye feel hungry," said Uncle Terry as he passed a well filled plate to Albert, "fer we live plain, an' it's good appetite as makes good vittles. I s'pose ye are used to purty high livin'."

"Whatever tastes good is good," replied Albert, and, turning to Aunt Lissy, he added, "This fried lobster beats anything I have tasted for a long time."

When the meal was over he handed the box of cigars he had brought to his host with the remark, "Please accept these, Mr. Terry, and when you smoke them think of the forlorn fellow you found by the wayside."

"I've got to leave ye to the tender marcies of the wimmin folks," said Uncle Terry, after thanking Albert, "for I've got work to do, and tonight we'll have a visit. I hope you'll be willin' to stay with us a day or two," he added, "an' tomorrow I'll take ye out fishin'."

"I will stay until tomorrow, thank you," replied Albert.

"I should like to row up to where I was left boatless yesterday," he said to Telly after Uncle Terry had gone, "and finish the sketch I began and also try to find the cushions I dropped in the woods. May I ask you to go too?"

"I should be glad to if mother can spare me," she answered.

When he rowed out of the little harbor where he had left his boat Telly sat in the stern holding the tiller ropes and shading her winsome face was the same broad sun hat he had seen on the rock beside her the evening before. It was a long four mile pull, but he was unconscious of it, and when he helped his companion out and secured the boat he said: "Now, I am going to ask a favor of you, Miss Terry. I want you to stand in just the position I first saw you and let me make a sketch of you. You were leaning on a rock and resting your head on one hand."

Telly looked puzzled.

"You did not know I saw you out on the point last evening, did you?" he added, smiling. "I stood and looked at you for five minutes and then walked away. I did not know who you were then or that I should meet you later. If I had I would not have been so rude."

The color came to Telly's face at his evident admiration, but she did not say no to his proposal, and stood patiently in the position he wished while he made the sketch. "There," he exclaimed when it was finished, "I shall transfer that to canvas when I go back, and whenever I look at it I shall recall this day and—you."

"Will you need the picture for that?" she replied with a smile.

"That sounded like Alice," he said, and added hastily, "Alice is my only sister, and I think more of her than of any other woman living."

Telly sat on the boat's cushions in a shady nook and watched Albert finish his sketch and then listened to his talk. He told her all about his home and sister and Frank as well. In a way they exchanged a good deal of personal history of interest to each other. Then they gathered flowers, and

"Draw yourself as holding the oars."

Telly insisted on decorating the boat. When it was done she wanted him to make a sketch of it for her. "Draw yourself as holding the oars," she said, "and I will try to paint a picture from the sketch to remember you by," she added with a smile.

Then, as the sun was getting low, they started for home. The breeze had vanished and the sea was like glass. Only the long ground swells barely lifted their boat and made the shadows of the trees along the shore wave in fantastic undulations. When they reached the Cape Telly said: "You had better go around to the cove where father keeps his boats. It's nearer to the house, and there is a float there where you can pull your boat out."

She waited until he had done so, and then stooped and selected a few of the flowers with which they had decked the boat. "I am going to paint them," she said quietly as she turned and followed Albert up to the house.

CHAPTER XXIII.

UNCLE TERRY and Albert had just seated themselves on the point that evening when Telly came out with a thick gray shawl and wrapped it around her father's shoulders. "It's a little chilly tonight," she said, "and I think you need it." Then, turning to Albert, she added, "Wouldn't you like one, too, Mr. Page?"

"I would, thank you," he answered, "if you have another to spare."

He would have answered yes if she had asked him to put on woolen mittens. She returned to the house and came back, this time bearing a white zephyr wrap, and handed it to Albert. "I will bid you good night now," she said, "for I presume you will sit here long after bedtime."

Uncle Terry's eyes followed her back to the house, and then he turned to his guest.

"I s'pose ye'd rather be talkin' to Telly than me out here in the moonlight," he said bluntly, "now that ye've got a little acquainted. It's the way o' young folks."

"I've had a very pleasant visit with your daughter this afternoon," responded Albert. "She was good enough to go with me to where I got left yesterday. I wanted to finish the sketch I began there." Uncle Terry made no answer, but sat pulling away at one of the cigars Albert had given him.

"Mr. Page," said Uncle Terry at last, "I've worried a good deal since last night 'bout what ye told me, an' I've made up my mind to tell ye the hull story an' trust ye with what no one else knows. To begin with, it's nineteen years ago last March when thar war a vessel got afoul o' a ledge jest off'n the p'int here in a snowstorm, an' all hands went down—that is, all but a little yearlin' baby that cum ashore tied up 'tween two feather beds. I fished her out o' the surf, an' Lissy an' me has taken care on her ever since, an' today she's worth a thousand times more'n she cost. How much she thinks o' me I'll let ye jedge by the way she thought 'bout my comfort tonight. There was a few trinkets came ashore with her—picturs o' her father an' mother, we knew, an' a locket an' ring an' some other things—so we knowed her name an' whar she cum from.

"Since then we have never heard a word from no one regardin' her people, or whether any was livin', till last winter I cum across a notice in a paper sayin' information was wanted 'bout an heir to an estate in Sweden, an' tellin' facts that made me sure Telly was the one wanted. The notice was signed by that lawyer, Frye, that I asked ye 'bout, an' I went to see him. He wanted proofs an' all that, an' I gave 'em to him, an', wussen that, he wanted money, an' I gave that to him. He's kep' askin' fer money ever since, an' I, like a fool, kep' sendin' it, in hopes if Telly had anything comin' she'd git her dues. I've sent him the locket an' things that belonged to her, an' all I've got so far is letters askin' fer more money an' tellin' 'bout expenses an' evidence an' witnesses' fees an' bonds to be filed. Lissy an' Telly know 'bout the case, but they don't know how much money I've paid out, an' I don't want they should. That's the hull story, an' now as ye're a lawyer, an' I b'lieve an honest one, I ask ye what's best to be done."

"I see now, Mr. Terry, why you distrust lawyers, and I do not wonder at it. To the best of my belief, you have been swindled in the most outrageous manner by Frye. He no doubt is acting for some law firm who have instructed him to find an heir, if there is one, to this estate, and they would naturally advance all expense money. Do you know the vessel's name, where she sailed from and who her master was?"

"She was a square rigger, an' the master's name was Peterson. In the newspaper piece the name was Neils Peterson, who cum from Stockholm," answered Uncle Terry. "I've got it in my wallet now, an' on the locket was the letters E. P., an' on a piece o' paper that was pinned to the baby's dress was the name Etelka Peterson."

"And did you send these proofs to Frye?" asked Albert quickly.

"I sent 'em six months ago," was the reply, "an' I've jest 'bout made up my mind I was a fool to 'a' done it, an' a bigger one to keep sendin' money."

"It would have been all right," answered Albert after a pause, "if you had put them into an honest man's hands. As it is you are lame—in fact, utterly at the mercy of Frye, who is robbing you." Then, after thinking a moment, he added: "I will gladly do what I can to help you, Mr. Terry, and at no cost to you for my own services. The first step must be to get possession of these material proofs, the next to find what firm has employed Frye. We are helpless until we get possession of those proofs."

"Ain't my word an' Lissy's as to savin' the baby no 'count?" asked Uncle Terry.

"Very good, so far as it goes, but really no proof that the child you saved is the one wanted for this inheritance. In the matter of a legacy the law is very exacting and demands absolute proof. No, the only way is to use duplicity and trick Frye or ask him to name his price and pay it, and as the estate may be large his price will naturally be extortionate."

Albert thought a moment and then added, "Has Frye ever written you admitting he has received or has those proofs in his possession?"

"Not a word," answered Uncle Terry. "All he writes is: 'Your case is progressing favorably. I need so much more money,' an' I send it an' lay 'wake nights worryin'."

"How long since he has sent for money?" asked Albert.

"'Bout a month, I reckon," replied Uncle Terry.

"I confess, Mr. Terry, I am stumped."

After a pause Albert asked Uncle Terry:

"How does your—I mean, how does Telly feel about this matter, Mr. Terry, for I suppose she knows the story?"

"That's suthin' I hate to talk 'bout, but as ye're likely to see more o' us an' more o' Telly it's better ye know it all. When she was 'bout ten we told her the story an' showed her the things we'd kep' locked up. She didn't seem to mind it then, but as she's growed older it sorter shadders her life, as it were. We used to ketch her lookin' at the things once in awhile an' cryin'. When I sent 'em to Boston she took on a good deal an' ain't been the same sence. We try to keep her from thinkin' 'bout it all we can, but she's curis in her ways, an' I've thought she was kinder 'shamed, an' mebbe broodin' over it makes it wuss."

"You do not mean that you fear she would make away with herself in a fit of melancholy, do you?"

"I dunno what to think," was the answer, "only I hate to have her out o' sight much, an' the more lovin' she is the more I worry."

"One thing please promise me," said Albert when they had started for the house, "do not hint either to her or your wife that you have told me anything about this matter. I will do all that can be done and consult only with you in private."

CHAPTER XXIV.

IN the morning Albert followed Uncle Terry around the circuit of his lobster traps in the Gypsy's boat, with Telly as a companion, and watched the old man hauling and rebaiting those elongated coops and taking out his prizes. The day was a perfect one, the sea just ruffled by a light breeze, and as her first timidity had now worn away, he found Telly a most charming companion. It was an entirely new experience to him, and the four hours' pull in and out of the island coves and around isolated ledges where Uncle Terry set his traps passed all too quickly.

"Do you know," said Albert when they had returned to the little cove where Uncle Terry kept his boats and as he sat watching him pick up his morning's catch and toss them one by one into a large car, "that the first man who thought of eating a lobster must have been almost starved? Of all creatures that grow in the sea there is none more hideous, and only a hungry savage could have thought them fit for food."

"They ain't overhansum," replied Uncle Terry, "but fried in pork fat they go middlin' good if ye're hungry."

That afternoon Telly invited Albert to row her up to a cove, at the head of which was a narrow valley where blueberries grew in profusion. "I want to pick a few," she said, "and you can make a sketch of the cove while I do." Helping her picking berries proved more attractive, and when her pail was full Albert made a picture of her sitting in front of a pretty cluster of small spruce trees, with the pail beside her and her sun hat trimmed with ferns.

"Your city friends will laugh at the country girl you found down in Maine," she remarked as she looked at the sketch, "but as they will never see me, I don't care."

"My friends will never see it," he answered quietly, "only my sister. And I am going to bring her down here next summer."

"Tell me about her," said Telly at once. "Is she pretty?"

"I think so," replied Albert. "She has eyes like yours, only her hair is not so light. She is a petite little body and has a mouth that makes one want to kiss her."

"I should like to see her ever so much," responded Telly, and then she added rather sadly, "I've never had a girl friend in my life. There are only a few at the Cape of my age, and I don't see much of them. I don't mind it in the summer, for then I work on my pictures, but in winter it is so lonesome. For days I do not see any one except father and mother or old Mrs. Leach."

"And who is Mrs. Leach?"

"Oh, she's a poor old soul who lives alone and works on the fish racks. She is worse off than I am."

It was a little glimpse into the girl's life that interested Albert, and, in the light of what he knew of her history, a pathetic one. Truly she was alone in the world, except for the two kindly souls who made a home for her.

"You will go away tomorrow, I suppose," she said with a faint tone of regret as they were rowing home. "Father said your boat was coming after you today."

He looked at her a moment, while a slight smile showed beneath his mustache. "I suppose I shall have to," he answered, "but I should like to stay here a month. I've not made a sketch of your house, even."

"I wish you would," she said with charming candor, "it is so lonesome here, and then maybe you would show me a little about painting."

"Could you endure my company every day for a month?" he asked, looking her full in the face.

"I don't believe you could endure ours," she replied, dropping her eyes, and then she added quickly: "There is a prayer meeting tonight at the Cape. Would you like to go?"

"Most certainly," he answered.

Albert had expected to see the Gypsy in the harbor when they returned that afternoon, but was happily disappointed. "I hope they will stay at Bar Harbor a week," he thought.

That evening when Telly appeared, ready to be escorted to the prayer meeting, he was certain that no fairer girl was to be found anywhere.

She was dressed in simple white, her masses of sunny hair half concealed by a thin blue affair of loosely knitted wool and had a cluster of wild roses at her throat. It was a new and pleasurable experience to be walking beside a well dressed young man whose every look and word bespoke enjoyment of her society, and she showed it in her simple, unaffected way.

That evening's gathering was a unique one in Albert's experience and the religious observances such as he never forgot. The place was a little square, unpainted building, and when Telly and he entered and seated themselves on one of the wooden settees that stood in rows not over a dozen people were there. On a small platform in front was a cottage organ and beside it a small desk. A few more entered after they did, and then a florid faced man arose and, followed by a short and stout young lady, walked forward to the platform. The girl seated herself at the organ, and the man, after turning up the lamp on the organ, opened the book of gospel hymns and said in a nasal tone, "We will naow commence our sarvices by singin' the Forty-third Psalm, and all are requested to rise an' jine." In the center of the room hung a large lamp, and two more on brackets at the side shed a weak light on the gathering, but no one seemed to feel it necessary to look for the Forty-third selection.

Albert and Telly arose with the rest, and the girl at the organ began to chase the slow tune up and down the keys. Then the red faced man started the singing, a little below the key, and the congregation followed. Telly's voice, clear and distinct, joined with the rest. A long prayer, full of halting repetitions, by the man at the desk followed, and then another hymn, and after that came a painful pause. To Albert's mind it was becoming serious, and he began to wonder how it would end, when there ensued one of the most weird and yet pathetic prayers he had ever listened to. It was uttered by an old lady, tall, gaunt and white haired, who arose from the end of a settee close to the wall and beneath one of the smoke dimmed lamps. It could not be classed as a prayer exactly, for when she began her utterance she looked around as if to find sympathy in the assembled faces, and her deep set, piercing eyes seemed alight with intense feeling. At first she grasped the back of the settee in front with her long, fleshless fingers, and then later clasped and finally raised them above her upturned face, while her body swayed with the vehemence of her feelings. Her garb, too, lent a pathos, for it was naught but a faded calico dress that hung from her attenuated frame like the raiment of a scarecrow. It may have been the shadowy room or the mournful dirge of the nearby ocean that added an uncanny touch to her words and looks, but from the moment she arose until her utterance ceased Albert was spellbound. So peculiar and yet so pathetic was her prayer it shall be quoted in full:

"O Lord, I come to thee, knowin' I'm as a worm that crawls on the airth: like the dust blown by the winds, the empty shell on the shore, or the leaves that fall on the ground. I come poor an' humble. I come hungry an' thirsty, like even the lowliest o' the airth. I come an' kneel at thy feet believin' that I, a poor worm o' the dust, will still have thy love an' pertection. I'm old an' weary o' waitin'. I'm humble an' bereft o' kin. I'm sad an' none to comfort me. I eat the crust o' poverty an' drink the cup o' humility. My pertector an' my staff have bin taken from me, an' yet fer all these burdens thou in thy infinite wisdom hev seen fit to lay on me I thank thee. Thou hast led my feet among thorns an' stuns, an' yet I thank thee. Thou hast laid the cross o' sorrow on my heart an' the burden o' many infirmities fer me to bear, an' yet I bless thee, yea, verily shall my voice be lifted to glorify an' praise thee day an' night, for hast thou not promised me that all who are believers in thy word shall be saved? Hast thou not sent thy Son to die on the cross fer my sake, poor an' humble as I am? An' fer this, an' fer all thy infinite marcy an' goodness to me, I praise an' thank thee tonight, knowin' that not a sparrer falls without thy knowin' it, an' that even the hairs o' our heads are numbered.

"I thank thee, O Lord, fer the sunshine every day, an' the comin' o' the birds an' flowers every season. I thank thee that my eyes are still permitted to see thy beautiful world, an' my ears to hear the songs o' praise. I thank thee, too, that with my voice I can glorify an' bless thee fer all thy goodness, an' fer all thy marcy. An' when the day o' judgment comes an' the dead rise up, then I know thou wilt keep thy promise, an' that even I, poor an' humble, shall live again, jinin' those that have gone before, to sit at thy feet an' glorify thee fer life everlastin'. Fer this blessed hope, an' fer all thy other promises, I lift my voice in gratitude an' thankfulness an' praise to thee, my Heavenly Father, an' to thy Son, my Redeemer, tonight an' tomorrer an' forever an' forever. Amen."

To Albert, a student of Voltaire, of Hume, of Paine, and an admirer of Ingersoll, a doubter of Scriptural authenticity and almost a materialist in belief, this weird and piteous utterance came with peculiar effect.

When the prayer meeting was concluded with an oddly spoken benediction by Deacon Oaks, and Albert and Telly were on their way back to the point, Albert asked:

"Who was the poor old lady that prayed so fervently? I never heard anything like it since I was a boy."

"Oh, that's the Widow Leach," Telly responded. "She always acts that way and feels so, too, I guess. She is an object of pity here and very poor. She has no relation living that she knows of, lives alone in a small house she owns and works on the fish racks summers, and winters has to be helped. Her husband and two sons were lost at sea many years ago, and father says religion is all the consolation she has left."

"Does she always pray as fervently as she did tonight?"

"Oh, yes; that's her way. Father says she is a little cracked about such matters. He pities her, though, and helps her a good deal, and so does most every one else here who can. She needs it." Then, after a pause, she added, "How did you enjoy the meeting, Mr. Page?"

"Well," replied Albert slowly and mentally contrasting it with many Sunday services when he had occupied a pew with the Nasons at their fashionable church in Boston, "it has been an experience I shall not soon forget. In one way it has been a pleasure, for it has taken me back to my young days." Then he added a little sadly, "It has also been a pain, for it recalled my mother and how she used to pray that I might grow to be a good man."

Albert was spellbound.

"You are not a bad man, are you?" responded Telly at once, looking curiously at him.

"Oh, no, I hope not," he answered, smiling. "I try to do as I would be done by, but the good people here might think I was, maybe, because I am not a professor of religion. For that reason I should be classed as one of the sinners, I presume."

"Well, so is father, but that doesn't make him one. Deacon Oaks calls him a scoffer, but I know he trusts him in

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others – Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

The Girl at Devil's Tower

By IZOLA L. FORRESTER

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

The first time that Campbell saw her she was standing in the doorway of the schoolhouse, ringing a huge, hollow sounding bell, while the children scurried in all directions like a flock of frightened sage hens.

Campbell pulled up Cyclone and watched. There had been no school at Devil's Tower for over a year. The last teacher had been a young fellow from Kansas City. The two Chibouque boys did him up one day when he called Louis "a half breed ignoramus." Louis said he wouldn't be called any name he didn't know the meaning of. The risk was too great. So he did up the teacher, and the key was turned in the schoolhouse door.

Campbell stared at the new schoolma'am admiringly. More than that, when her flock was safe inside he rode leisurely up to the open windows and stared in them—not rudely, but interestedly.

She looked absurdly young perched up behind the rough plank desk. She was fair. A bunch of purple wild flowers was fastened in her hair. Jules Chibouque fired a tattered hat at the row of nails back of the teacher. It fell short of the mark and struck the bunch of purple flowers. Campbell's leg was half out of the saddle when the girl called:

"Jules, you come here."

It was a good, commanding voice. Campbell waited. Jules stalked down to the desk and was ordered to crawl beneath it in disgrace. A knothole offered golden opportunities, and Jules' tongue wagged merrily through it at an appreciative audience.

The little schoolma'am bent forward and gave the offending member a royal slap with an oak ruler. Jules howled in pain, and Campbell rode on rejoicing. Devil's Tower was to know discipline at last.

He found out at the Arrow Head ranch that she was old Colby's niece, and was boarding there. Also that she was nineteen, from Chicago, and her name was Ethel Maude Colby. The Colby did not affect him, but all the way home from the ranch and during the week that followed the name of Ethel rang in his ears like a refrain of half forgotten music.

Every day Campbell rode up the river road and looked in the schoolhouse window just for a glimpse of the pretty blond head. One Saturday night he started wildly for the Arrow Head ranch, and all the way home Cyclone kept pace with the joyous whistling, for he had been introduced to her, and she had blushed, and all the world was full of promise.

After that night Cyclone was ridden at a breakneck speed every afternoon from Campbell's ranch down at Five Forks to the bend in the river road, there to wait patiently and peacefully until a certain figure in a trim gray skirt and white shirt waist rode down the path from the schoolhouse on a black pony and greeted him with sky eyed pleasure.

"Reckon Tom Campbell's shining up to ye, Ethel," old Colby said gravely when the wooing was well advanced.

The girl laughed and bent lower over her books at the kitchen table.

"It isn't anything, Uncle Ben."

The old ranchman glanced at her keenly through the rifts of smoke from his pipe.

"Ain't it? Tom seems to think it is. Got any objections to him?"

Edith laughed and shook her head.

"He's just a cowboy," she said, and looked up to find Tom Campbell's six foot two blocking the kitchen door. There was a look in his frank gray eyes she had never seen there, not of anger or defeat, but simply determination.

The following day, long after the last of the children had gone, the schoolma'am still sat at her desk. It had been raining all day—a wild autumn rain that came in fitful dashes against the window panes, with now and then the heavy crash of thunder. The door opened suddenly with a bang, and Campbell entered, dripping with rain and smiling.

"I was just passing by," he began, as if he had not raced his broncho for the last five miles. "It's a bad storm and getting worse."

"I must go, then." She rose hastily and reached for her hat on the row of nails back of the desk.

He came over and leaned on the desk.

"No, you musn't. Wait till it lets up a bit." He lifted her pearl handled pen tenderly and curiously, as if it had been a stray feather dropped from an angel's wing. "That's a mighty pretty thing, ain't it?" He met her eyes suddenly. "Say, I want to know if you meant what you said yonder, about my being a no account, rough and tumble cowboy?"

"I didn't say that."

"But you meant it." Her lashes drooped guiltily under his steady gaze. "I don't blame you. I know I'm different from your city breed, but love comes the same to a man whether he's a professor or a cowboy, you know. I'd make you mighty happy, Ethel, if you'd let me." His voice was low and tender. "Seems as if I don't want anything in life but you."

He bent nearer over the narrow, roughly painted desk, his eyes on a level with her own, but she looked away from him out of the little side window. It was splashed and blurred with rain, but she could see the faint outlines of the hills that lay like a barrier between the range country and the outer world. She had always hoped to go back some day, but the spell of the open and the glory of freedom stole over her with the low music of his voice. Somewhere in her heart she caught the echo to his own words and knew the power of their meaning.

"Seems as if I don't want anything in life but you."

A crash of thunder shook the little frame building, and she rose unsteadily.

"Will you please bring Gypsy from the shed for me," she said. "I must go before dark."

He hesitated.

"If you do, I shall go too. The dam up at Caribou run broke at 4 o'clock, and the river's racing like a mountain cascade."

It was nearly two miles to the old log bridge that spanned the river. Campbell did not try to talk. He took her silence and reserve as his answer, but his face looked almost stern in the shadow of his sombrero as he rode beside the black pony. As they neared the log bridge a vivid flash of lightning made both horses rear, and he caught Gypsy's bridle.

"We can't cross the river," he said. "You'll have to turn back."

"I can't," she answered over her shoulder, as the pony shook herself free. "The bridge is safe."

Before he could stop her she had ridden forward on to the frail logs, that shuddered and strained at the shock. There was a sudden rending, crushing sound, and the next instant the logs had parted and swept away on the foaming waters with Gypsy's terrified head and pawing hoofs showing between them.

One cry for help reached Campbell's ears, but that one changed all the world.

"Tom! Tom!" she called, and he headed Cyclone downstream in a race with the swollen, rushing river. As he came abreast of her he raised himself in his stirrups and swung his lariat straight for the pony's head. It fell and drew taut. Cyclone braced for the shock, as he had in many a roundup capture, and in a few seconds the black pony was stumbling up the bank, drenched and half strangled, but with her burden still safe in the saddle.

Campbell lifted the slim, fainting figure down and held her close in his arms, her white face on his shoulder. For one brief instant she seemed all his own, and he bent and kissed the pale, sweet lips that had so nearly drained the cup of death.

"Mine," he whispered beneath his breath. "Mine, just for now."

Her eyes opened, and she smiled up at him.

"For always, Tom," she said softly. "I'm glad you're a cowboy."

The Cheap Watch Habit.

"When cheap watches first came out," said a jeweler, "a man who carried one was as chary about showing it as he would be about exhibiting a white 'dickey' front to hide a flannel shirt. Now it's different. A man with a nickel watch will walk right up to a chronometer exhibited in a jeweler's window, pull out his timepiece and regulate it with as much pride and earnestness as though it was a Jurgensen. The fact that other men are looking over his shoulder regulating gold watches does not feaze him.

"A man came in here with a dollar watch to be repaired. 'It will cost you fifty cents,' I said.

"'Oh, go ahead,' he replied. 'I'll save fifty cents anyhow. I've got a gold one at my uncle's. Every little while I drop around to take a look at it and pay the interest. I suppose I'll take it out some day. Meanwhile, I've got mightily attached to this one.'"—New York Press.

Trout Poachers.

A favorite method of trout thieves is to take a sack or bag, weight it with stones and place it, mouth up stream, in the narrowest part of the brook. Then one of the rascals comes down stream, wading, poking under the banks with a stick and scaring the trout, who rush down stream into the sack. This sort of thing, varied now and then by exploding dynamite under the water and gathering the dead or stunned fish, which float, has cleaned out some of our public trout waters. In other words, these thieves have robbed the public and have sold the proceeds of the robbery for their own benefit. The game laws are not nearly stringent enough. Fines never deter such rascals from attempting to reimburse themselves. Imprisonment at hard labor is the only antidote.—Harper's Weekly.

PRE-EMPTED BY BIRDS.

The Noddies That Own Bird Key, In the Gulf of Mexico.

Out in the gulf of Mexico sixty-five miles from Key West toward the setting sun rise half a dozen barren sand bars from the exquisite turquoise blue waters. One of these, Garden key, is a government fort and coaling station; another is the Loggerhead key, our last outpost toward Cuba and Central America. Other islets are untenanted save when the great sea turtles crawl. One alone, Bird key, is pre-empted by the birds. It would be hard to find a more desolate or isolated region. Though the climate is warm throughout the year, it is not until May that the feathered hosts arrive from the far south at this sandy rendezvous. In the van come the noddies, a few about the 1st of May and the rest within a few days. A week later the sooty terns pour in, and it is said that within a week of their arrival both kinds begin to lay. At the time of our coming nearly all the birds had eggs and were devoting themselves to their family cares.

To reach the buildings from the little landing place we had to pass through a tract of bushes, and here it was that I saw the first nests of the noddies. Upon the tops or in the forks of the bushes each pair had built a rather rude yet fairly substantial platform of sticks, only slightly hollowed, and upon each one sat a dark gray bird. There was something about these graceful little creatures that instantly took me by storm, a case of love at first sight. The noddy is very much like a dove—except for its webbed feet—in size, in form, in the softness of its plumage, the expression of its large dark eyes and its gentle, confiding ways. There is no wild affright as the stranger approaches. Just a shadow of fear is evident, but the birds sit quietly on their nests, hoping and trusting, and do not fly unless approached almost within arm's reach. Then they flit gently away, alighting upon a neighboring bush until the intruder has withdrawn, when they return directly to their charge. It seemed remarkable to find birds so perfectly tame.

PITH AND POINT.

When a friend tells you of his wrongs he wants sympathy and not an argument.

Before a man's first baby is a week old he knows more than he had ever dreamed about.

Speaking of "secret sorrows," it is a good plan to keep them so, as telling only multiplies them.

When a man wants to give you advice you can't lose anything by listening, but you will make an enemy by refusing.

A man occasionally breaks even. When it comes to wall paper the wife does the picking and the husband does the kicking.

Every one should have saved up enough money to take things a little easier by the time the age comes for taking a nap in a chair.

Trained Tortoises.

Japanese and Korean showmen in addition to their skill as jugglers and acrobats display a truly marvelous skill in teaching animals tricks. They not only exhibit educated bears, spaniels, monkeys and goats, but also trained birds and, what is the more astonishing of all, trick fish.

One of the most curious examples of patient training is an exhibit by an old Korean boatman of a dozen drilled tortoises. Directed by his songs and a small metal drum, they march in line, execute various evolutions and conclude by climbing upon a low table, the larger ones forming of their own accord a bridge for the smaller, to which the feat would otherwise be impossible. When they have all mounted, they dispose themselves in three or four piles like so many plates.

The Study of Nature.

I confess I have not much sympathy with the laboratory study of nature except for economical purposes. Nature under the dissecting knife and the microscope yields important secrets to the students of biology, but the unprofessional students want but little of all this. I know a young woman who took a postgraduate course in biology at a noted summer school, and the one thing she learned was that certain bacilli were found only in the aqueous humor of the eyes of white mice. The world is full of curious facts like that, that have no human interest or educational value whatever.—John Burroughs in Country Life In America.

None Better.

Mrs. Wise—I wouldn't have bought cigars for my husband if I were you. A man doesn't like his wife to do that. Mrs. McBride—I know it's risky unless you're very careful to get the best, but I was careful. Mrs. Wise—Were you? Mrs. McBride—Yes. I picked out a box called "Finest made." There couldn't possibly be anything better than that, you know.

Pride of Ancestry.

"We can't afford to recognize them. Their ancestors were in trade."

"Weren't ours?"

"Of course, but our trade ancestors are two generations further back than theirs."

Mean.

Miss Mugley—I always try to retire before midnight. I don't like to miss my beauty sleep. Miss Pepprey—You really should try harder. You certainly don't get enough of it.

I've never any pity for conceited people, because I think they carry their comfort about with them.—George Eliot.

Oxford Gem Gas Range

This range is placed on the market to meet the demand for a moderate priced and thoroughly efficient gas stove. It is made with either two or three top burners, and a large oven, with drop door, which acts as a shelf, on which roasts, cakes, pies, etc., may be drawn out. The oven is a perfect baker and roaster, evenly and quickly heated.

This range, though very compact, is quite big enough to cook a considerable sized dinner, and will do it as well as the most expensive gas range.

The Oxford Gem Gas Range is very handsome in appearance, durable and economical.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO PASS A BY-LAW TO ALTER, WIDEN AND DIVERT VICTORIA AVE. AND PINNACLE ST.

To Whom It May Concern:—

Take notice that the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville intend to pass a by-law for the purpose of altering, widening and diverting the north-west corner of Victoria Ave and Pinnacle St. in the City of Belleville by taking in and including with the said streets at that point a part of the Lot known as the Hotel Lot on Henry Carr's plan of the City of Belleville, composed of 592 square feet more or less, and being described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the west limit of Pinnacle St. northward 40 feet from the intersection of the northern limit of Victoria Ave. with the western limit of Pinnacle St.; thence southwesterly on the outside of an arc of the circle, with a radius of 63 feet, to a point on the northern limit of Victoria Ave., 40 feet westward from above described intersection; thence easterly along the northern limit of Victoria Ave. 40 feet to Pinnacle St.; and thence northerly along the westerly limit of Pinnacle St. 40 feet to the place of beginning.

And take notice further that the said by-law will be read a first time and may be finally passed at a meeting of the said Municipal Council on the 1st day of August, 1904, commencing at 8 o'clock in the evening.

And take further notice that any person whose land may be prejudicially affected by the proposed by-law will upon petition be heard either personally or by counsel or solicitor at such meeting of the Council, or if desired at any previous meeting thereof.

And take further notice that the plan of the proposed street may be seen at the office of the City Clerk in the City Hall in the City of Belleville.

W. C. MIKEL,
City Clerk City of Belleville

Dated at Belleville this 29th day of June, 1904. 29 6 13 20

TOOK OUR FLAG DOWN.

PASSENGERS ON YUKON VESSEL COMPELLED CAPTAIN TO LOWER IT AND TROUBLE MAY FOLLOW.

Dawson, Y.T., July 5.—The British steamer Tyrrell took a Fourth of July excursion of children up the river on Saturday. The committee and other Americans forced the captain to raise the United States flag on the middle flag staff before sailing. A complaint was laid with Collector of Customs Busby, who on the return of the Tyrrell summoned Captain Ritchie to give a written explanation of the matter. The captain acknowledged he knew better, but said he was forced by the clamer to raise the United States flag.

A false report went around that the steamer had been fined two thousand five hundred dollars' penalty, and that the captain had lost his papers. Collector Busby will probably report to Ottawa for a decision.

Busby was the Canadian officer at Skagway who flew the Canadian Customs flag by written order of his superiors. The flag was cut down by an American lawyer. A mob of a couple of hundred swarmed around Busby's office to force him to raise the American flag over the Canadian. Busby absolutely refused, but referred the matter to Ottawa. This ultimately led to the lowering of the United States Customs flags throughout Canada.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

Sports and Pastimes

FISHING.

A singular complaint comes from Lake Memphremagog, Quebec. It is charged that the perch which have been introduced into the lake are killing off the big gray lake trout or rather that the trout are killing themselves off by attempting to feed upon the perch, the dorsal fins of which stick in the gullet of the feeder and produce death. That pike can swallow small perch without much inconvenience there is abundant proof. In the absence of other bait, perch make good live bait for pike. One remembers anglers cutting off the dorsal fin before using the fish for bait, but if the perch is small this does not appear to be at all necessary, for the pike always swallows his prey head foremost, while the spines of the perch are capable only of projecting backward—shutting down like the props of an umbrella upon pressure from the front—so that they would not appear to impede the operation of swallowing. It sometimes, however, causes considerable inconvenience to a pike to attempt to swallow too large a perch, and Gosse and his natural history illustrates this by a circumstance of not infrequent occurrence in Sweden. Large perch swallow the baited hooks of stationary night lines and then enormous pike gorge the hooked perch in their turn. Though the pike is seldom or never actually hooked, yet on the fisherman drawing in his line the perch sticks so fast in his throat that he is unable to get rid of it, and both are taken.

AQUATICS.

Lou Scholes, the Canadian sculler, won his heat for the Diamond Sculls yesterday, defeating S. R. Wells of the Bedford Rowing Club. Scholes won by four lengths. Time 9 minutes 32 seconds. The time at half distance was 4.21. After passing Fawley, Scholes slowed up, and let Wells come up. From then on home Scholes almost paddled in. The time for the full course was 9.32. Scholes had the Berkshire side of the river, which is considered by many as a disadvantage. However, he had no trouble to beat Wells, as he could have beaten him by twenty or thirty lengths.

SPORTING NOTES.

Armstrong, of Iroquois, won all the provincial championships at the wheeling meet in that village July 1st.

At Bowmanville, in the semi-finals, for the Midland League championship, Locust Hill defeated Deseronto by 2 to 0.

Thos. F. Kiely, of Ireland, won the all-round championship of the world in the games held in St. Louis under the auspices of the A. A.U. Kiely scored 6,086 points; A. B. Gunn, of Buffalo, was second with 5,907 points.

The sloop yacht Little Rhody, owned by C. F. Tillinghast, of the Rhode Island Yacht Club, of Providence, finished first in the Brooklyn Yacht Club's 330-mile ocean race from New York to Marblehead, thereby winning the hundred guinea cup presented by Sir Thos. Lipton.

Mr. I. L. Moore Joins the O.B.C. Staff.

The teaching staff of the commercial department of Ontario Business College has been increased by the addition of Mr. Irvine L. Moore. Principal Johnson brought Mr. Moore from Oxford, Nova Scotia, where he was the accountant and secretary of a large joint stock manufacturing company. Mr. Moore possesses exceptional qualifications. He holds a first class teacher's certificate, taught successfully for three years, is a graduate of Ontario Business College, and a practical and experienced accountant. We mentioned yesterday that Mr. G. A. McClatchie, of the O.B.C staff has passed the intermediate examinations of the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

STRANGE COMPLAINT.

KINGSTON DOCTORS PUZZLED OVER ILLNESS AMONG CHILDREN.

Kingston, July 5. — Doctors here are very busy attending to children afflicted with a strange complaint which, so far, has not been fully diagnosed. The little folks are attacked with severe pains in the chest or bowels and great suffering results. The period of the disease in most cases is 24 hours. The doctors have scores of cases. So far there have been no fatalities, but some babies and children of tender years have been very ill.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

DANGER IN EATING UNRIPE FRUIT

MANY VEGETABLES ALSO NOW UPON THE MARKET ARE LIKEWISE INDIGESTIBLE.

Safe—Oranges, strawberries, lettuce, apples, pears, bananas.

Unsafe — Watermelons, cantaloupes, cucumbers, cherries, peaches, plums.

The present hot spell and the rush of summer weather carry with them various reminders of the diseased conditions that associate themselves with the season. Prominent among the maladies will doubtless be those of the intestinal type due to improper and excessive feeding.

What we shall eat and what we shall drink are always important questions, but they have a peculiar force and significance at a time when unripe and indigestible fruits and vegetables are apt to be crowded upon the market with a view of meeting the usual demand for premature products.

The standards of safety should be freshness and ripeness. Anything short of these conditions are not only menaces to health, but may lay the foundation for protracted illness during the coming months.

With young children, especially the various bowel complaints take a leading place in mortality statistics. In indicating the few fruits and vegetables that are safe for the ordinary individual at this time we can only give an approximate estimate, based upon the probability of their maturity and freshness.

Persons with delicate digestions need not be warned against overindulgence in forbidden viands. The severe colics that follow such ventures, the violent attacks of vomiting and other intestinal disturbances are sure to place them on their guard against a repetition of attacks.

Even the strawberry, which is now within ordinary reach, has its drawbacks, producing troublesome eruptions in those of tender skin, and the banana is apt to act as treacherously inside the stomach as under the heel.

The orange, perhaps, is the leading luxury that does not carry with it a penalty. The new apple and the new pear have not yet made their appearance, but even the "holdovers" at their prohibitive price, are excellent and safe articles of diet. But what can we say for the pale watermelon, the hard, green cantaloupe, tough cucumber, the unripe cherry, the green peach, and, later, for the premature plum? The surest and best way is to want to have all these properly ripened in our own gardens.

MILKING BY ELECTRICITY.

NEW APPARATUS INVENTED IN GERMANY SAID TO BE EXPEDITIOUS AND CLEANLY.

Washington, July 5.—An invented apparatus for milking cows by electricity is reported by Consular Agent Warner, at Gera, Germany. He says:

Rubber hoods are attached to the udder of the cow. These hoods are connected with a vessel for receiving the milk by means of a rubber tube, from which the air is exhausted by means of the electric device. It is claimed that the suction thus secured resembles very closely the sucking of a calf, and that for this reason the cow lets down her milk more freely than when milked by hand. It is also claimed that absolute cleanliness of the milk may be secured when this method of milking is employed.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and while especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

COMMISSION ASKED FOR

Sydney Strikers Ask Government to Intervene.

Anticipated Blood-Letting Did Not Occur—No Clash Between the Men and the Militia—Employes Who Attempted to Go to the Works Were Forcibly Turned Back By the Strikers—Military Rule Prevails.

Sydney, N. S., July 6.—Monday night it was expected that more trouble would ensue yesterday morning at the steel works, but the hundreds of citizens who went there to witness the fray were disappointed. There was no demonstration of violence whatever. Several employes attempted to get into the works, but were turned back. The strikers forcibly removed them. The militiamen made no effort to interfere as far as the laborers were concerned, but did escort officials to the plant under cover of arms. Nothing occurred that tended to bring on a clash between men and militia.

The course the civic authorities intend to pursue is to let matters go on as at present until the military is increased to such a strength as will enable them to cope successfully with the men. The work of recruiting men for the battery and the infantry corps began yesterday morning and last evening, the total number of volunteers in the plant numbering about 100 men.

In connection with this strike there took place last night one of the biggest labor demonstrations ever seen in this province, when some 1,500 members of the P. W. A. lodges throughout the mining districts marched through the streets and held a mass meeting in the Rosslyn Rink. That large building seldom contained a closer packed audience, and the best of order prevailed. Grand Secretary Moffatt was the principal speaker. He outlined the causes leading up to the strike. Several other speakers followed.

Mr. Moffatt announced that at the meeting of the grand sub-council on Saturday it was decided to ask the Government to appoint a royal commission or make arrangements for an unconditional arbitration, and, pending the decision, as the case might be, the men would be willing to go back to work. If the commission or the arbitrators decided against them they would abide by it.

In connection with the strike situation at Sydney there has been no change of any consequence since Monday. The 17th Field Battery and a squad of the 94th Battalion Argyle Highlanders are still guarding the plant, and the city in general is given over to military rule. Major Crowe of the Field Battery, is in command.

A COOL RECEPTION.

Nothing Left By Railway Committee of Mr. Maclean's Amendments But the Title—Mr. Lennox's Bill.

Ottawa, July 6.—Mr. Maclean's bill to amend the Railway Act met with a cool reception in the Railway Committee yesterday. The Committee voted down in turn the following clauses:

1. To compel the railways of Canada to give reduced passenger rates by the application of the Michigan law to Canada.
2. To bring express companies within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission.
3. To compel railway companies to admit independent telephones into their stations on the payment of compensation for direct damages incurred in construction, operation and maintenance.
4. To deprive the chairman of the Railway Commission of the power to overrule the other two Commissioners on questions involving points of law.

Not Yet Abandoned.

The fight for the foregoing amendments to the Railway Act, though checked in the Railway Committee, has by no means been abandoned. Mr. Maclean intends to carry his bill into the House, where the friends and enemies of reduced passenger rates will be placed squarely on record.

Railways and Their Employes.

Mr. Lennox's bill providing against agreements between railway companies and their employes being entered into, relieving the former of liability for personal injury, was reported with an amendment providing for the submission of the question of Parliament's jurisdiction to the Supreme Court, and for the bringing of the act into force by proclamation when that question is settled.

The Canada Southern.

One bill respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company, which had stood over for some weeks at Mr. Maclean's request, was reported with some amendments. This bill validates an agreement between the Canada Southern Railway Company and the Pere Marquette Railway Company, whereby the latter secures running rights over the former's line in Canada. Mr. Maclean had previously contended that the opportunity should be utilized by Parliament to compel the company to give a general two-cent rate in Canada, as they do in Michigan.

The bill was amended to make it clear that the Railway Commission will have jurisdiction over the companies affected by the bill, and also so as to protect the rights of the creditors of the Leamington and Chatham companies which are part of the system.

The Committee then adjourned.

FIRST MORNING SESSION.

Commons Made Fairly Good Progress With Railway Estimates.

Ottawa, July 6.—Only a couple of members over the required quorum of twenty appeared in the House yesterday morning at the first morning session. The reason for this was, as came out in a few minutes, that the Railway Committee, which comprises about half the House, was dealing with important bills.

The Treadgold Concession.

Mr. Borden, at the opening, called attention to a report that instructions had been given to Mr. Justice Britton not to report on the Treadgold concession in the Yukon. He presumed that was incorrect, but would like to ask when the report would be down. Mr. Sifton had said early in July.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied that his attention had been called to a statement regarding this matter made in another place. He had not had time to consult with his colleagues, but would do so, and hoped to be able to make a statement to-day.

The Railway Estimates.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, taking up the railway estimates at the point where the committee had left off last night.

A few minor items were passed, but little or no progress had been made when the House rose for lunch at 1 o'clock.

Prorogation at Hand.

The House during the afternoon and evening made fairly good progress with the railway estimates.

Rows of empty benches indicated a waning interest in the proceedings of the House. Prorogation is in the air, and there is a prevalent feeling that the session will conclude on or about July 20.

Government After C. A. R.

Montreal, July 6.—A special from Ottawa to La Patrie says: "You can state without fear of contradiction that the Government is negotiating with Mr. Booth for the purchase of the Canada Atlantic, the price being twenty million dollars. The road will then be leased by the Canadian Northern. I am told that although an Order-in-Council will be adopted, the measure will not be submitted to the House this session."

Engineer Is Chosen.

Montreal, July 6.—The Dominion Government have retained the services of J. A. Jamieson, the Canadian grain elevator engineer, to prepare plans and specifications for a large fireproof grain elevator to be built at Port Colborne, the Lake Erie entrance to the Welland Canal, and which will be an adjunct to the canal system.

Banquet to Dundonald.

Ottawa, July 6.—One hundred members of the Rideau Club last night honored Lord Dundonald by tendering him a banquet. The function was a great success, the ex-G.O.C. being enthusiastically greeted. Sir James Grant presided.

Contract Worth 31,232.

St. Catharines, July 6.—C. F. Gildersleeve of Kingston, has secured the contract to extend the sewage system in this city. His tender was $31,232.

KILLED IN LANDSLIDE

100 Tons of Earth Fell 50 Feet, Striking W. H. Maddick.

Although Not Buried By the Mass, the Young Man Lived Only a Few Minutes After Being Struck—Ned Connors Was Wounded and Three Horses Were Buried—How An Invitation to Drink Saved Five Men and a Child.

Hamilton, July 6.—Yesterday afternoon, at the west end gravel pit, 100 tons of earth fell 50 feet, killing W. H. Maddick, a 19-year-old son of Thos. Maddick, 428 North John street, wounding Ned Connors, 21 Melbourne street, and burying three horses. Maddick, who is a harnessmaker, was drawing gravel for a cement walk. He had just backed a one-horse wagon into the pit when the landslide occurred. A big chunk of gravel struck him, but he was not buried. He lived only a few minutes after the accident. Connor's arm was painfully injured. Just before the mishap five other men and a child were standing in the pit. The men were invited out to take a glass of beer and they had not left ten minutes before the earth came rolling down. It has been the custom to place a blast in the bank at nights, for the earth does not usually start to fall until some time after the explosion takes place. In spite of the protests of the men a blast was set off at noon yesterday. An inquest was opened on the body of young Maddick last evening.

Crushed in Gravel Pit.

Welland, July 6.—Edward Harmon, who resided at St. John's, and Pichard Vaughan, a farmer, living nearby, were Monday killed by a cave-in in a gravel pit. They were engaged in excavating and the bank caved in on them. E. Fulsome was injured and one horse killed. Mr. Harmon leaves a widow and one child. Mr. Vaughan, a widow, but no family.

Kent Farmer Killed.

Chatham, July 6.—While loading hay Monday afternoon John Vickery Shaw, a farmer, living a few miles from here, met with almost instant death. He was standing near the rear of the load, receiving the hay from his son-in-law, Isaac Andrew, who was pitching, when the horses suddenly stepped ahead and he fell backward to the ground. He lived only a few minutes. Coroner Wiley of Dresden did not find a bone broken, and ascribed death to heart failure from shock, Mr. Shaw having been in poor health for some time. A wife, three daughters and two sons survive him. Both of the latter are doctors, and one is practicing in Clare, Mich.

Drowned at St. Catharines.

St. Catharines, July 6.—John Plumley, a boy of 16 or 17 years of age, employed in the annealing room of the McKinnon Dash and Metal Works Co., lost his life by drowning between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday. After having eaten his dinner he went down to the canal at a point where the Port Dalhousie extension of the Niagara, St. Catharines & Toronto Railway crosses the canal, and with a number of companions went in swimming. The young man could swim but very little, and his companions were endeavoring to teach him the art. He jumped in and his companions were ready to assist him, but he never rose to the surface. His body, up to 5 p.m., had not been recovered. Deceased came here from Napanee about three years ago and lived with his parents.

Explosion Kills Two.

Haliburton, July 6.—Shortly after 7 o'clock yesterday morning the large boiler in Peters & Cairns saw mill, located about seven miles from this village, exploded, completely demolishing the mill and instantly killing William Duncan, a young man employed in the mill. William Winn, another employe, only survived a few hours. Several others were more or less injured by falling timbers and scalding steam. The machinery loss to Messrs. Peters & Cairns will be very considerable. The mill and machinery, which would be valued at about $8,000, is a complete wreck. The season's cut of lumber, shingles, etc., is also lost.

Hit By G.T.R. Express.

Guelph, July 6.—G.T.R. express No. 4, from the west, due in Guelph at 6 a.m., struck and nearly killed William Forbes, a young Grand Trunk brakeman, at New Hamburg, yesterday morning. He was sitting on the side of the track, apparently unaware of the approach of the train. When struck, he was thrown some distance. His head was badly cut and his body bruised. He was removed to Berlin Hospital, where it is thought he will recover.

Baby in Carriage Hurt.

Port Arthur, July 6.—A peculiar accident took place here yesterday when the infant child of George Heard had a jaw broken and received other injuries. The child was in a baby carriage in charge of a girl. The carriage was left alone for a minute and the wind catching it swept it into a trench being dug for waterworks. The baby was badly injured.

Two Persons Stunned.

Galt, July 6.—Monday's weather card brought us one of the heaviest rainfalls, and, without doubt, the most severe electric storm of the year. The most serious accident was reported at John Taylor's, sr., Sprague's road, where the barn was shattered, two valuable horses killed and a horse and one or two persons stunned. J. W. Taylor, manager of the Bell Telephone Company, is wearing a troubled expression. The storm burned out about 35 telephones.

Wouldn't Take a Dare.

St. Louis, Mo., July 6.—Because he would not take a dare, George M. Lorenz, 21 years old, dived from the centre span of Eads Bridge yesterday and was drowned. The wind straightened his body as he neared the water and he struck on his stomach. Efforts made to save him by friends in a launch were futile.

Three Girls Burn to Death.

Raleigh, N. C., July 6.—Three girls, ranging from 4 to 12 years, were burned to death yesterday at Carleigh Cotton Mills, near this city. They were the daughters of John T. Cole, a boss engineer. The father, mother and two children escaped, one of the latter, a boy, being terribly burned. The father made frantic but ineffectual attempts to rescue his children.

Total Dead Is 20.

Litchfield, Ill., July 6.—S. E. Shappard, cashier of the Hughes Bank at Humes, Ill., injured in the Wabash wreck Sunday night, died yesterday, and several more of the wounded lying at the St. Frances Hospital cannot live. This makes the total dead twenty.

ADRIFT FOR SIX DAYS.

Another Boat Load of Norge Survivors Picked Up.

Aberdeen, Scotland, July 6.—Another boat load containing seventeen survivors of the ill-fated Danish steamer Norge, which foundered off Rockall Reef, 290 miles from the Scottish mainland, on June 28, were landed at Aberdeen last night by the steam trawler Largo Bay. Six hundred and twenty-seven souls are still missing. The contingent now being cared for at Aberdeen consists of 160 passengers, the third mate of the Norge, the quartermaster, a steward, a lamp trimmer and one of the crew.

They drifted at the mercy of the Atlantic for six days. When both water and food were gone and when the occupants were almost too exhausted even to hope, the trawler hove in sight. This was on July 4, and when the boat was about thirty miles off St. Kilda. Those rescued had eked out an existence on two biscuits per day.

The third mate states that three other boats started with that rescued by the Largo Bay.

For these boats the British gunboat Leda, the Government fishing cutter Jackal, a steamer chartered by the Danish Consul at Glasgow, and several other vessels are diligently searching.

Subscription Opened.

Copenhagen, July 6.—A subscription in behalf of the relatives of the victims and of the rescued passengers of the Danish steamer Norge, which foundered Tuesday, June 28, off Rockall Reef, northwest of Scotland, with the loss of 646 lives, was opened here yesterday morning. Condolences are pouring in from the royal family and people in America and elsewhere.

Tried to Commit Suicide.

Copenhagen, July 6.—Touching scenes were witnessed again yesterday in the offices of the United Steamship Company. The wives of two of the emigrants lost on the Norge attempted to commit suicide by drowning, but they were saved at the last moment.

Confessed to Robbing Mails.

Windsor, July 6.—Postmaster Wigle of Windsor, received complaints that registered letters were disappearing from the Windsor office, and he laid a trap to catch the guilty parties. By a decoy letter, Dugold Moir, who hauls mails from the depot, was caught. Moir made confession, stating he had taken all of the letters missed. Restitution was made and after a trial Moir was let go on suspended sentence.

Gee Will Hang.

Ottawa, July 6.—Lord Minto has approved of an Order-in-Council allowing the law to take its course in the case of George Gee, now in Woodstock, N. B., jail, under the sentence of death for the murder of Milly Gee, his cousin. The unfortunate man is 23. He will hang July 22.

Cronje Wedded.

St. Louis, Mo., July 6.—Gen. Piet Cronje of Boer war fame was married yesterday to Mrs. Stertzel, the widow of a Boer soldier. The ceremony was performed on the Boer camp on the grounds and was private.

Dainties of the Russian Peasant.

The Russian peasant, even if the bread he eats is black, has a bon bouche to add to his meal much sought by epicures in the western world—the wild mushrooms, which grow thousands upon thousands on the steppes of Russia. At any time a full and savory meal is provided with the addition of sausage and onions; even a mushroom often contents them for a meal with their coarse rye bread. The poorest laborer has also a luxurious drink always available from the ever present samovar, and the tea they drink would be the envy of any American connoisseur of that beverage, for the best of China's tea is found in Russia, and all classes enjoy its quality and fragrance. Never is water allowed to stand on the tea over a few moments, so none of the poisonous tannin is extracted, and a mildly stimulating, straw colored drink is the result. It would be well if the Russian peasant would content himself with this, for his only great vice is drunkenness.

A Story Once Told by Lowell.

Something happened one day in James Russell Lowell's office which suggested the following: There was a time when the fastest sailing ships in the world were built in the shipyards of New England. About that time an American clipper and an English yacht were entering the harbor of Genoa together, and there was a race between the clipper and the yacht, and the clipper won in the race. When the two vessels were in port the owner of the English yacht, a person of polished manners, came on board the American and very handsomely congratulated the captain of the clipper upon his achievement, which he said was all the more remarkable in view of the fact that it was the first time that his yacht had ever been beaten. The liberal minded old Yankee captain replied: "Well, now, that's curious. It's the first time the Polly Ann ever beat anything."

When Golf Was Serious.

Golf players complain that their favorite game is not taken seriously enough by the people, and they protest against the tone of levity in which newspaper paragraphers discuss the game. There was a time when golf was taken seriously enough, as this excerpt from an ancient law document attests:

On September 9, 1637, Francis Broune, sone to John Broune, wabster in Banff, was convicted by the borrow or justice court of the burgh of breaking into the buithe of Patrick Shand and stealing therefrom "sume golff ballis," and the judges ordainit the said Francis to be presentlie tacken and careit to the gallowshill of this burghe, and hangit on the gallows thereof to the death, whereof William Wat, dempster of the said assyis, gaive domme.

Whelks as Money.

Dewarra, a currency of New Britain, is an instance of how the spoils of the chase may be turned to account as the outward and visible sign of wealth. Dewarra is made by stringing the shells of a dog whelk upon the ribs of palm leaves. These strings may be retailed at so much a fathom—usually the price is equivalent to about three shillings a fathom length—or they may be made into various articles of personal adornment to be worn on great occasions. In New Britain the dewarra hoarded up by a rich man is produced at his funeral and divided among his heirs in much the same kind of way as personal property is divided among us.

LAURIER FALLS OUT WITH ANOTHER CABINET MINISTER.

The Premier Repudiates Senator Scott's Recent Words.

Sir Wilfred Gives Another Explanation Concerning the Treadgold Concession, and Promises Report From Judge Britton—W. T. R. Preston Writes Letter in London Times on the Dundonald Case—Railway Estimates Create Sharp Debate.

Ottawa, July 7.—At the opening of the House yesterday morning Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave a further statement of the position of affairs so far as the Treadgold concession was concerned. The concessionaires, he said, having asked to be relieved, their request was granted. Judge Britton then thought it was unnecessary that he should make a report of his investigation. This view had been confirmed by the Secretary of State, Hon. R. W. Scott, without consulting his colleagues, but when the matter came before Council it was decided that a report should be made, and it had since been ordered.

"When may we expect the report?" asked Mr. R. L. Borden.

"Judge Britton has been communicated with and we may expect some information to-morrow," replied the Premier.

I Willian.

Mr. R. L. Borden asked if it was the intention of the Government to introduce legislation founded on the resolution moved by Mr. Logan and passed some days ago, declaring that the preferential tariff should only apply to goods imported through Canadian ports.

"I will call the attention of the Government to the question," replied Sir William Mulock, the senior member of the Government present at the moment.

"I thought the hon. gentleman was the Government," replied the Opposition leader, smiling.

Preston Writes a Letter.

Mr. E. F. Clarke called attention of the Government to a letter in The London Times of June 18 by Mr. W. T. R. Preston, Immigration Commissioner, dealing with the Dundonald case, and taking the ground that there were no politics in the Canadian militia. Mr. Clarke declared the letter to be ex parte, inaccurate and therefore misleading. He objected to a servant of the Canadian people taking such ground, and asked if the Government had any policy on the question, whether they approved or disapproved his action.

Hon. Clifford Sifton said he was not aware until yesterday of the existence of the letter. He had given orders to have it looked up and brought to him, but he had not, neither had his colleagues, had an opportunity of examining it yet. The subject was one to which they must give consideration, but at the present time he was not prepared to give any opinion on it. As soon as the Government had given it consideration they would give the House the information.

Officials in Elections.

The House went into Committee of Supply at 11.45, taking up the vote of $7,000,000 for railway estimates chargeable to revenue. Mr. A. C. Bell (Pictou) complained of a number of Government railway officials who took part in the recent bye-election in Guysboro', the names he gave being as follows: Alphonse T. Leblanc, N. Pushie, G. W. Peeples, Harry A. Peeples, John MacDonald, Lewis MacGuire, Wm. MacGuire, Alex. Reeves, John P. Meagher, Chas. Ceittonden, John M. Grant. Some instructions must have been given to those men by someone in authority. The Government laid down the principle that officials must not take part in politics, beyond voting, and he asked that a commission be appointed to investigate the matter. He added the name of John A. Kirk, Warden of the Dorchester Penitentiary, who had spent the day in the riding.

Mr. Sinclair, member for Guysboro', pressed for a definite charge regarding Mr. Kirk, pointing out that that was his native riding. Mr. Bell, however, would go no further.

The Fullest Freedom.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson declared that the fullest freedom was allowed employes of the Government Railway to vote as they pleased, an assurance which the Opposition accepted with conspicuous reserve.

A sensational statement was made by Mr. Emmerson to the effect that some train despatchers on the I.C.R. have been purposely keeping back trains to discredit the administration of the railway. He threw a threat sufficiently bloodcurdling to curb the enthusiasm of these alleged offenders.

The Guysboro' election was the subject of a long, and in the main fruitless, discussion. The discussion continued till late last night, when the appropriation of $6,500,000 was passed.

Mr. Hoyle Again Nominated.

Beaverton, July 7.—The Liberal-Conservatives of North Ontario met in convention here yesterday for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the Local House. President Charles Kelley of Uxbridge presided. The convention would hear of only one name, that of W. H. Hoyle, the present member, and he received the unanimous nomination. In accepting, Mr. Hoyle spoke briefly on his work in the House during the present Parliament.

Honor For Mr. Nordheimer.

Toronto, July 7.—A high distinction has been conferred upon Samuel Nordheimer, the German consul for Ontario. Yesterday he was in receipt of the insignia of the Order of the Red Eagle, a decoration conferred by the Kaiser himself. It is a decoration founded by the Margrave of Bayreuth in 1705. Mr. Nordheimer has been consul in Ontario since 1887.

WILL NOT HOLD TIBET.

Exchange of Views Between England and U.S. re Occupancy.

London, July 7.—The Associated Press learns from a high British source that exchanges of views are taking place between America and Great Britain, with respect to Thibet.

It is understood that the British Government frankly disavowed any ulterior purpose regarding Thibetan territory, reiterating that it has no intention to permanently occupy Thibet, and that Great Britain's motives are those already proclaimed to the whole world. In view of this declaration the British Government announced that Brigadier-General Macdonald's expedition is expected to retire so soon as the purposes for which it was organized have been achieved.

Captured the Jong.

Guangtse, Thibet, July 7.—A British storming party, consisting of Gurkhas and Fusiliers, captured the Jong yesterday afternoon. The British casualties were not great.

SIR HENRI SUCCEEDS.

Solution of Complaint Will Be Satisfactory to Canadians.

London, July 7.—(C. A. P.)—Sir Henri Elzear Taschereau, speaking to the Canadian Press Agency Tuesday evening, said: "I have succeeded in obtaining a solution of the complaint made by the Canadian bar with regard to certain delays required by the present rules of the Privy Council. The solution will prove most satisfactory to Canadians. After the present session the objectionable posting methods will be abolished. It will make in some cases a saving of six months." Sir Henri Taschereau said the abolition of English solicitors had not been raised and they had rights which had been respected.

SITUATION SERIOUS.

French and British Ships Arrive at St. John's, Newfoundland.

St. John's, Nfld., July 7.—The cruiser Lavoisier, flagship of the French squadron, arrived here yesterday. Her commander conferred with Vice-Admiral Sir Archibald Douglass on the flagship Ariadne of the British squadron regarding the revival of serious friction along the French shore, owing to misunderstandings between French and Newfoundland fishermen respecting their altered status under the new French shore treaty which has not yet been ratified. The authorities of both countries regard the situation as very serious.

London, July 7.—The Daily Mail's correspondent, under date of July 6, says that the Mullah's forces have attacked the Somali's, killing 50, levying on the natives friendly to the British and looting about 1,000 sheep and 50 cattle. They then retired, pursued by pioneers, who shot down 20 of the Mullah's men. The Daily Mail's correspondent at Berbert (the capital of Somaliland) maintains that the whole of the Somaliland campaign has been fruitless, the Mullah retaining full control of his particular region.

ANOTHER MINISTER GONE.

The Hon. R. W. Scott, Secretary of State, so says the Toronto News, has cut the painter and left the sinking ship. Or perhaps it would be more correct to say he has been decapitated for having given a reply to a question put to him in the Senate by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, which the Premier repudiated, and as a punishment for assuming too much cut off his head.

On the 30th of June Sir Mackenzie Bowell asked when the report of the Treadgold Commission would be presented to Parliament, to which the Hon. R. W. Scott replied that Judge Britton had been instructed not to make a report, as the Treadgold Concession, as it is termed, had been cancelled.

This extraordinary conduct on the part of the Minister was so strongly condemned in the Senate and in the press that Sir Wilfrid repudiated his colleague, and his colleague resigned.

When the full facts are known they will form an interesting chapter in the political history of the Laurier mal-administration of Canada.

J. ARTHUR MARSH

SCOTS BACK UP DUNDONALD.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by a standing vote at a meeting of the members of Invergarry Camp, S.O.S., held at Alexandria, Ont., on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo:

"That the members of Invergarry Camp, of the Sons of Scotland, have learned with profound dismay of the removal from office of the Earl of Dundonald, as general officer commanding the Canadian militia.

"That Lord Dundonald was recognized by the whole community as incomparably the best man who had ever held that responsible position, his professional attainments being of the highest, his enthusiasm unbounded, and his devotion to duty an inspiration of the militia force of Canada and the community at large. This highly placed Scottish nobleman has laboured with anxious zeal and at the sacrifice of every social tie and domestic relation to place the Canadian militia upon a proper and efficient footing, and his efforts were bearing fruit with promise of complete success when he was relieved of his command upon a constitutional pretext; yet we cannot but believe that the constitution of Canada would have survived the result of any remarks made by Lord Dundonald with respect to a principle commented upon by him and admitted by all, viz., that the introduction of politics into the militia force and system of Canada is to be deplored and avoided at all hazard; and we now desire to place on record our dissatisfaction at, and disapprobation of the treatment meted out to so gallant a soldier, who was so loyal to his duty, to his King, and to the Canadian people, and who had gained not merely our esteem, but the admiration and affection of all who are Scotsmen by birth or descent, and who now make Canada their home, as well as of all other loyal Canadian subjects to His Majesty the King."

The Ross Government, it is safe to assume, is getting some pretty hard knocks this afternoon, but if the orators, one and all, talked from now till morning, they could hardly point out all its faults, but they're pretty certain to touch on a few of them, and it would, probably, make the ears of Ross and Stratton tingle were they within hearing. President Clowry, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, holds that laziness, more than alcohol or anything else, is responsible for the failures that men and women make of their lives.

"Take the tramp," said President Clowry one day. "What is the tramp's dominant trait? Is it not laziness? You may say the tramp is fond of liquor. Well, I answer, that he is fonder of idleness. He could swim in liquor if he would work for it. But he will not work.

"All failures are lazy. But the laziest failure is the tramp. A tramp knocked at the back door of my cousin's farm in Vermont one hot afternoon.

"'Lady,' he said to the cook, 'will ye spare a poor feller a drink of water?'

"'Certainly,' she answered. 'Here's a tumbler, and there's the pump.'

"'Thank you, kindly,' said the tramp. 'And now, if you'll just work the handle, we shan't be long.'"

Jasper of the Undertow

By WM. H. OSBORNE

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

When the class of oughty-four lifted up its mighty voice in a farewell chorus and disbanded for the long vacation some of its individual members started in to play and some to work. A goodly number of them, in order to earn sufficient money to go back, posed as waiters at seaside resorts, as drivers of cabs, as conductors of trolley cars, as baggage smashers during the rush season—as anything and everything. This was the crowd without money. The rest of the gang went where it could afford to go.

Jasper went to Newport also—everybody knows Jasper, the quarterback on the varsity. But Jasper went, not as millionaire or night hawk or waiter or baggage smasher. He went as Jasper. Jasper was not overburdened with cash either.

Jasper knew a good many people—a quarterback invariably does, wherever he may be—but of all the people that he knew in this wide world the individual that he particularly preferred to know was a girl in the college town. The last name of this girl was a name to conjure with, for it was Willoughby, and the reason was that her father was Willoughby, the trolley magnate and multimillionaire. This made her popular among the men. But to Jasper it was sufficient that her first name was Marion and that he, and he alone, had the privilege of using her first name rather than her last. Jasper was glad that such a girl lived and moved and had her being upon the face of the earth. For the rest, he didn't think about it. He didn't like to remember that she was rich and he was poor. He knew that he had no claim of any kind to her; knew that probably he never would have any claim to her, but Jasper loved this girl with all his heart and soul, and she—well, no one knows.

She was at Newport also. But it was not for that reason that Jasper was there also. And, though he was there and she was there, she never saw him. Jasper saw her now and then at a distance, but never close enough to bow.

"I ASK NO FAVOR OF YOU, SIR. I CLAIM A RIGHT."

Miss Marion Willoughby was a good, all round sort of girl. She did everything well, from tooling a four-in-hand about the land to making chocolate caramels or Welsh rabbit. She was one of those girls who believed that a watering place is meant for something else than sticking to dry land. The rougher the water was the better to her liking.

It was upon a remarkably warm day that Miss Willoughby declined Merriwell's invitation to join a motor car crowd bound inland, and twenty minutes later she was in the surf. The beach was almost deserted. She plunged in boldly and struck out for deep water.

On a little ledge of rock to the right there sat a man, one of the life saving crew that patrolled the coast. His arms and face were brown as berries. He sat alert and watchful, waiting for something to turn up.

A few people in the surf turned to watch Miss Willoughby swim out to sea. The brown life saver kept glancing up and down the coast.

Afar out, in the unseen distance, something had happened an hour or so before. It probably had been the tail end of a storm. The wireless announcement of it came only in the shape of one great wave that suddenly dashed far out on the beach, followed by another and another and another. Miss Willoughby, out in deep water, did not feel these waves.

There is one difficulty with large waves. They are large when they come in, and they are large when they go out. They come in on top. They go out underneath. They make a great fuss coming in, but have but little to say when they sneak back again. But then is the time when they are prepared to do the mischief.

The people near the shore laughed and danced in this sudden advent of fierce breakers. They thought of nothing but of their own excitement. The life saver glanced anxiously from time to time up and down and out to sea.

Suddenly something happened. The crowd did not see it. The man only did, and that man was the life saver. He saw that the girl who had ventured into deep water had attempted to swim back to shore. He saw that she had made no progress. Some unseen force beneath her was steadily drawing her out to sea. He saw that, with the effort she was making, her life, a human life and nothing less, was going out with the fatal undertow.

He rose to his feet and, shading his mouth with his hand, roared to her in stentorian voice that he was coming. This was essential, for encouragement was everything. Then he plunged into the surf and rapidly swam out. It was easy going out. He knew it would be. But coming back—that would be another thing. Finally he reached the girl. She was well nigh exhausted, but had the foresight to float upon her back.

"I'm here!" he called in a cheery voice as he reached her.

"Why, Manning, Manning," she exclaimed, "where did you come from?"

The man laughed. "I'm one of the coast patrol," he answered. "Just now I'm a life saver by profession."

The man was Manning Jasper of the class of oughty-four, earning money for his next year's course. He caught her by the arm.

"Come, we must go back," he said. "Heaven send we get them safely! It's a rough trip, and no mistake." It was a rough trip, and the girl knew it. But some thirty-three minutes later Manning Jasper staggered up out of the surf with a precious burden in his arms—an unconscious girl whom he had saved from certain death. Jasper, too, was quite certain of one thing, and that was that but for a certain fact he might never have been able to get her back. That fact lent new vigor to his arm, and that fact was simply this—that the girl, just as she was losing consciousness, had lifted up her lips and kissed him and had called him by his name. It was that that brought them safe to shore.

A day later Manning Jasper stood within the presence of Willoughby, the trolley magnate. "Mr. Jasper," said this man, "what you ask is most preposterous. This is not the age of heroics and of romance. The fact that you have saved my daughter is nothing. If you had not done it some other man would. Why, there are men on the shore who are paid, actually paid, to do that sort of work."

"Exactly," replied Jasper, "and I am one of them—a fact you did not know." He leaned over and touched the rich man on the arm. "Mr. Willoughby," he continued, "that is not the point. For some months past, judged by standards other than of this world, Miss Marion was mine. Under ordinary circumstances I never would have claimed her, even though she loved me. I am poor and she is rich. Now we stand upon equal terms and I have a right to it. That life she gives to me—with the love that she has borne me for so long. I ask no favor of you, sir. I claim a right—a right that is no one's but my own. I have earned your daughter and she belongs to me."

The next day Jasper returned to his post to earn more money. He had already earned the girl.

A Humble Hero.

Every student of history remembers Captain Perry's dispatch after the battle of Lake Erie—a sentence terse and yet glowing—"We have met the enemy, and they are ours."

Every one remembers the great and significant result of the fight, but few perhaps have heard of one humble worker who served his country just as truly there as if he had been on deck amid shot and shell, earning glory as well as the reward of a good conscience.

Just as the ships were going into action the mate of the Lawrence said to Wilson Mays, who was ill and unfit for service:

"Go below, Mays; you are too weak to be here."

"I can do something, sir," was the stout reply.

"What can you do?"

"I can sound the pump, sir, and let a strong man go to the guns."

Then he sat down by the pump and thus released for active service a man who had more muscle, and when the fight was over there he was found with a bullet through his heart.

CURED TOTAL PARALYSIS!

It puzzles the Doctors and astonishes his patients how South American Nervine cures so many who are "given up to die"—it never fails.

"My wife was stricken with nervous prostration, which developed into total paralysis. We had hardly any hope of her recovery, but had heard of the great cures made by South American Nervine in cases of nervous troubles. We decided to try the treatment, and it was astonishing the results that followed the taking of three bottles—it worked wonders indeed. I feel I cannot speak too highly of this great remedy."—Edward Parr, Surrey Centre, B.C. 42

Putting It Mildly.

A traveler tells of a trip on a jaunting car in Ireland where he had as a fellow passenger an ugly looking man whom he was not sorry to leave behind at an inn.

"That was a queer looking fellow, Pat," I remarked to the waggish driver as we proceeded on our way.

"Faith, yer honor, and he's as quare as he looks. He's a villain. He's done fifteen years for laving his wolfe without visible manes of support."

"Oh, get out, Pat! A man can't get fifteen years' penal servitude for 'leaving his wife without visible means of support.'"

"Shure and can't he, sir?" said Pat, with a twinkle in his roguish eyes. "He did, though. And, bedad, isn't it leaving yer wolfe 'without visible manes of support' when ye throw her out of a window on the third floor?"

The Underground Ocean.

The investigations of the geological survey have brought to light facts about the enormous quantity of underground water contained in the crust of the globe which are calculated to astonish the ordinary reader. Below a depth of about six miles it is believed that no water can exist in the rocks, because the tremendous pressure probably closes all pores; but above that level the amount of underground water is estimated to be equal to one-third of all the water contained in all the oceans. If poured over the land surface of the globe, the underground water would be sufficient to cover it to a uniform depth of from 3,000 to 3,500 feet.

The Wrong Market.

Mrs. Newlywed—Have you any nice slumps this morning? Butcher—Slumps! What are they? Mrs. Newlywed—Indeed, I don't know, but my husband is always talking about a slump in the market, and I thought I should like to try some.

Her Curiosity.

"Mrs. Chellus looks bad, doesn't she?"

"Yes, and no wonder. She's been awake every night for a week past."

"The idea! What was the matter?"

"She discovered about a week ago that her husband talks in his sleep, and of course she had to listen."

The late Nellie Farren, when she visited America with the London Gaiety Company, danced before a well-known New York club.

At the end of the dance, during an informal supper, someone began to talk about the woman—a burning topic at that time.

"Do the English believe in woman's emancipation?" a lawyer said to Miss Farren. "Do they believe in opening the same field to women as to men, and to paying them at the same rate?"

"Oh, yes," said the little actress. "Even the English tramps believe all that. A tramp asked a countrywoman of mine one day for assistance, and she said to the man sternly:

"'Why don't you go to work?'

"'Madam,' said the tramp, 'twenty years ago I made a vow not to do another stroke of work till women were paid the same wages as men.'"

Newcomers to Canada.

Ottawa, July 7.—The official immigration returns for the fiscal year show the total number of arrivals to be 130,329, to which will be added one or two thousand more for later arrivals. This is an increase, according to the present returns, of about 2,000 over the previous year, when the number was 128,364. The returns are as follows: British Isles, 50,915, as against 41,792 last year; Continent of Europe and miscellaneous, 36,241, as against 37,099 last year; United States, 43,173, as against 49,473 last year. The increase from the British Isles is over 9,000, the decrease in the numbers from the United States about 6,000, and a small decrease from the Continent of Europe.

Wanamaker Meets Balfour.

London, July 7.—John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, sailed for New York yesterday on the White Star Line steamer Majestic. Before leaving London, Mr. Wanamaker had a long interview with Premier Balfour at Downing street. It is stated that the interview was in connection with the postal facilities of the United States and Great Britain.

Her Engine Broke Down.

Montreal, July 7.—The steamer Alexandria, owned by the Picton Navigation Company, left Rochester, N.Y., on Sunday with a party of excursionists on board for Quebec. While on the river her engines broke down and she became useless. She was towed into Sorel by a tug, and the passengers will be obliged to finish their trip by rail.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

Uncle Terry

....By....

CHARLES CLARK MUNN

all money matters, and I think father is the best and kindest man in the world. He has been so good and kind to me I would almost lie down and die for him if necessary."

"How do you feel about this matter of belief?" Albert asked after a pause. "Are you what this old lady would call a believer, Miss Terry?"

"Oh, no," she replied slowly, "I fear I am not. I always go to meeting Sundays when there is one—mother and I —and once in awhile to the Thursday evening prayer meeting. I think it's because I enjoy the singing."

When they reached the point Albert could not restrain his desire to enjoy the society of this unaffected, simple and beautiful girl a little longer. The moon that Frank had planned to use was high overhead, and away out over the still ocean stretched a broadening path of silvery sheen, while at their feet, where the ground swells were breaking upon the rocks, every splash of foam looked like snow white wool.

"If it's not asking too much, Miss Terry," said Albert with utmost politeness, "won't you walk out to the top of the cliff and sit down a few moments while I enjoy a cigar? The night is too beautiful to turn away from at once."

Telly assented, and they took possession of the rustic seat where Albert had listened to her history the night before. What a flood of emotions came to him as he watched his fair companion, all unconscious of his scrutiny, and with them a sudden and keen interest to unravel the mystery of her parentage and the hope that some time he might do it. He also felt an unaccountable desire to tell her that he knew her pathetic story and to express his interest in it and his sympathy for her, but dared not. "It may hurt her to know I know it," he thought, "and I will wait till she knows me better." Instead, he began telling her about himself and his own early life, his home, his loss of parents, his struggle to earn a living and how much success he had so far met.

When his recital and cigar were both at an end and it was time to go in he said, "I may not have another chance to ask you, Miss Terry, before I leave here, but when I get back to Boston may I write to you, and will you answer my letters if I do?"

The question startled her a little, but she answered:

"I shall be pleased to hear from you, Mr. Page, and will do the best I can in replying, only do not expect too much."

When he had bidden her good night and was alone in his room the memory of Mrs. Leach and her pitiful prayer, coupled with Telly's pleading eyes and sweet face, banished all thoughts of sleep, and he watched the moonlit ocean while he smoked and meditated.

CHAPTER XXV.

"HOW did ye like the prayer meetin'?" asked Uncle Terry the next morning as Albert stood watching him getting ready to start on his daily rounds. "Did the Widder Leach make ye feel ye was a hopeless sinner?"

"It was an interesting experience," replied Albert, "and one I shall not soon forget."

"Oh, it don't do 'em no harm to git together an' pray an' sing, an' most likely it divarts their minds from other troubles; but, in my way o' thinkin', prayin' is a good deal like a feller tryin' to lift himself by his boot straps. It encourages him some, but he don't git much further." Then he added, "You haven't thought o' no way to git me out o' my scrape, hev ye?"

"I have thought a good deal about it," replied Albert, "and the best way, it seems to me, is for you to go to Frye and tell him you can't afford to carry the case any further and offer to pay whatever fee he sees fit to ask. You can tell him you will give up the case entirely, and ask him to return the proofs you want. I may decide to have a detective within hearing, so that if he refuses you these things we can use the detective as a witness in a replevin suit. Most likely he will demand quite a sum, but it is best to pay it if we can get the proofs. I will advance money enough to cover what he is likely to ask. What I want you to do is to wait until he sends for more money; then come to me at once."

Uncle Terry looked at Albert a moment and suddenly, grasping his hand, exclaimed, "I can't thank ye 'nough for yer offer to help me, but I kin say how sorry I am I distrusted ye at fust, an' as long as I've a roof to cover my head ye're sure to find a welcome under it an' the latchstring allus out."

"I thank you for your kindly words, Mr. Terry," responded Albert, "and I am likely to avail myself of your invitation again before the summer is over. I expect my friends back today and must join them, but I assure you I would much prefer to stay here for the two weeks I have planned for my outing."

"Ye won't go till I see ye again, will ye?" asked Uncle Terry anxiously.

"No. If the Gypsy shows up today we will stay in the harbor tonight, and I should like to have you and Miss Telly visit her." Then as the old man pushed off and pulled out of the cove with long, slow strokes, Albert watched him with a new interest. "Poor old fellow!" he thought. "He is honest as the day is long and has a heart of gold beneath his blunt speech. How hard he has to work for what he gets, and what a vile thing in Frye to rob him so!" When the old man was out of sight Albert strolled over to the village. On the outer side of the harbor and opposite where the houses were he came to some long rows of slat benches, and busy at work spreading split fish upon them was the old lady who had thanked the Lord so fervently at the prayer meeting.

For an hour he strolled around the harbor watching the men at work on boats or fishing gear and sniffing the salt sea odor of the ocean breeze, and then returned to the point and began sketching the lighthouse. He was absorbed in that when he heard a sharp whistle, and, looking up, there was the Gypsy just entering the harbor. He ran to the cove where he had left his boat, and by the time the yacht was anchored had pulled alongside. To his surprise no one was aboard but Frank. "Where are the rest of the boys?" he asked, as that young man grasped his boat. Frank laughed. "Well, just about now they are playing tennis and calling 'fifteen love' and 'thirty love' with a lot of girls down at Bar Harbor. The fact is, Bert," he continued as Albert stepped aboard, "our gander cruise has come to an end. They ran into some girls they knew, and after that all the Gypsy was good for was a place to eat and sleep in. I've run her up here and shall let you keep her with you until you get ready to go home. I'm going to cut sticks for the mountains, and if I can get one of the girls to go with me I may visit Sandgate."

Albert laughed heartily. "Want to hear some one sing 'Ben Bolt' again?" he queried.

"Well, maybe," replied Frank. "The fact of the matter is, the whole trip has gone wrong from the start. You know what I wanted, but as it couldn't be, I did the next best thing and made up this party, and now the cruise has ended in a fizzle. By the way, where is the girl with the wonderful eyes you [illegible]

"Just now I imagine she's helping mother in the house," answered Albert quietly; and then he added,

She bade him goodby.

"Well, what is the programme, and where are you going with the Gypsy?"

"I want to be landed at the nearest port where I can reach a railroad, and then you can do as you please with her. My skipper will do your bidding."

"What about the rest of the boys?"

"Well, you can run to Bar Harbor and dance with the girls until the rest want to come back, or you can do as you please. The Gypsy is yours as long as you want her after I'm ashore. I think I'll run up to Bath and take the night train for the mountains if there is one. If not, we will lie at Bath overnight."

"I must go ashore and leave word I am coming back," said Albert. "The fact is I've found a client in this Mr. Terry, and it's an important matter."

"So is the blue eyed girl, I imagine," observed Frank, with a droll smile. When the irrepressible owner of the Gypsy had deserted her Albert returned to the Cape and remained there for a week. How many little trips he induced his new found friends to take on her during that time, how much gossip it created in the village and how many happy hours he and Telly passed together! The last day but one of his stay he invited everybody at the Cape, old or young, to go out on a short cruise, and nearly all accepted.

When the morning of his departure came, Uncle Terry said, "I hope we'll see ye soon, Mr. Page, and ye're sure of a welcome here, so don't forget us," and then he pulled away on his daily round to his traps.

Telly accompanied Albert to the cove where his boat was and bade him goodby. When the yacht rounded the point she was there waving an adieu and remained there until lost from sight.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE one point of pride in Nicholas Frye's nature was his absolute belief in his own shrewdness. "They can't get the best of me," he would say to himself when he had won an unusually knotty case. He knew he was both hated and feared by his fellow members of the bar. Being hated he didn't mind, and being feared flattered his vanity to an intense degree. When Uncle Terry put himself in his power and, like a good natured old sheep, stood to be sheared, Frye only laughed at his client's stupidity and set out to continue the robbery as long as possible. Messrs. Thygeson & Co. of Stockholm, who had first employed him to hunt up an heir to the estate of old Eric Peterson, whose son Neils and his young wife had been lost on the coast of Maine, fared no better. To them he only stated that he had found several promising clews and was following them as rapidly as possible, but it all cost money, and would they kindly send a draft on account for necessary expenses, etc. When Albert had taken away his best client the old scoundrel suffered the worst blow to his vanity he ever received. "Curse the fellow!" he would say to himself. "I'll pay him and have revenge if I live long enough. No man ever got the best of me, and in the long run no man ever shall!"

But there is a Nemesis that follows evil doers in this world, ready to strike with an invisible hand all who are lost to the sense of right and justice. In Frye's case the avenging goddess lurked in his inordinate belief in his own shrewdness, coupled with a fatuous love of speculation. A few lucky ventures at first in the stock market had fanned the flame.

Then along came a war cloud in Europe. Stocks began to drop and provisions to advance. September wheat was then selling in Chicago at 90 cents. Frye bought 50,000 bushels on a margin. France and Germany growled, and wheat rose to 94. Frye sold, clearing $2,000. Then it dropped a cent, and Frye bought a hundred thousand bushels more. Once again the war cloud grew black, and wheat rose to 98. The papers were full of wild rumors, and the Wall Street Bugle said wheat would look cheap at a dollar and a half inside of a month. Then it advanced to $1, and Frye lost his head. His holdings showed a profit of $7,000, and sudden riches stared him in the face. Once more the two bellicose foreign powers growled and showed their teeth. Wheat rose another cent, and Frye doubled his holdings. Then the powers that had growled smiled faintly, and in one day wheat fell to 93 and was still falling. At every drop of a cent he was called upon for $2,000. Day by day it vibrated, now going up a cent and then dropping two, and when Uncle Terry and Albert were discussing how to checkmate his further robbing of the lighthouse keeper he was, with muttered curses, watching his ill gotten gains vanish to the tune of many thousand dollars per diem. He neglected his business, went without his meals and forgot to shave. He had mortgaged his real estate for $20,000, and that was nearly gone. Wheat was now down to 80, and France and Germany were shaking hands.

Frye could not sleep nights. His margins were almost exhausted and his resources as well. He had put up $40,000, and if wheat fell 3 cents more it would be all swept away. Then he executed a second mortgage at high interest and waited. It was the last shot in his locker, and all that stood between him and ruin, but wheat advanced 2 cents, and he began to hope. He had absolutely ignored business for two weeks, and now he went to work again. To collect the little due him and raise all the money he could was his sole thought. He wrote to Thygeson & Co. that he had at last found the heir they were in search of and described what proofs he held, at the same time stating that on receipt of his fee of a thousand dollars all and sufficient proofs of identity of the claimant would be forwarded. Then he wrote to Uncle Terry and demanded $300 more. September wheat had now fallen to 78.

CHAPTER XXVII.

BLANCH NASON, Frank's younger sister, was his good friend and sympathizer and in all the family discussions had usually taken his part. His elder sister, Edith, was, like her mother, rather arrogant and supercilious, and considered her brother as lacking in family pride and liable to disgrace them by some unfortunate alliance. It was to Blanch he always turned when he needed sympathy and help, and to her he appeared the day after he had left the Gypsy. His coming to the mountains surprised her not a little.

"Why, what has brought you here, Frank?" she asked. "I thought you were having high jinks down in Maine on the yacht with your cronies."

"Oh, that is played out," he answered. "The boys are at Bar Harbor, having a good time. Bert is at a little unheard of place saying sweet things to a pretty girl he found there, and I got lonesome, so I came up here to see you and get you to help me."

"I thought so," answered Blanch, laughing. "You never did come to me unless you wanted help. Well, who is the girl now, and what do you want?"

Frank looked surprised.

"How do you know it is a girl?" he asked.

"It usually is with you," she answered, eying him curiously. "So out with it. What's her name?"

"Alice Page," he replied.

"What, the girl you wanted us to invite to go on the yacht?" asked Blanch.

"That's the one, and, as you know, she wouldn't come."

"Which shows her good sense," interrupted Blanch. "Well, what can I do in the matter?"

"Much if you want to, and nothing if you don't," he answered. "The fact is, sis, I want you to pack a trunk and go with me to call on her. She is mighty proud, and I imagine that is why she turned the cold shoulder on my efforts to get her to come to Boston to meet you all. Now, if you go there, if only for one night, the ice will be broken, and of course you will invite her to visit you and all will go well."

All three sang.

"A nice little scheme," responded Blanch, "but what will mamma and Ede say?"

"Oh, never mind them," answered the plotter. "They need never know it. Just tell them you are going to Saratoga with me for a few days. We will go there if you like, only we will stop off at Sandgate on the way. Now, do this for me, sis, and I'll buy you the earth when Christmas comes!"

"Well, you will have to stay here until Monday," said Blanch, "and be real nice to mamma and Ede all the time, or I can't fix it. Lucky for you, Master Frank, that they are out driving now!"

"But why must we wait four days?" asked Frank petulantly.

"Because, my love lorn brother, in the first place I don't want to miss the Saturday night hop, and then we are booked for a buckboard ride tomorrow. Another reason is I mean to pay you for turning your back on us and going off on the Gypsy."

That afternoon Frank wrote Alice the longest letter she had ever received, nine full pages. It was received with some pleasure and a little vexation by Alice.

"Mr. Nason and his sister are coming here Monday," said she to Aunt Susan, "and we must put on our best bib and tucker, I suppose. But how we can contrive to entertain his sister is beyond me." Nevertheless, she was rather pleased at the prospective visitation. Her school had been closed for over a month and her daily life was becoming decidedly monotonous. When Albert had written regarding the invitation the Nasons had extended, she believed it was due solely to Frank's influence, and when that young man tried to obtain her consent to join a yachting party, providing his mother and sister decided to go, she was morally sure of it. But it made no difference, for if the supposedly aristocratic Mrs. Nason had sent her a written invitation she was the last person in the world to accept it. To so go out of her way for the possible opportunity of allowing the only son of a rich family to pay court to her was not characteristic of Alice Page. Rather a thousand times would she teach school in single blessedness all her life than be considered as putting herself in the way of a probable suitor. Of her own feelings toward Frank she was not at all sure. He was a good looking young fellow and no doubt stood well socially. At first she had felt a little contempt for him, due to his complaints that he had hard work to kill time. When she received the letter announcing his determination to study law and become a useful man in the world she thought better of him. When he came up in June it became clear that he was in love with her. So self evident were his feelings that she at that time felt compelled to avoid giving him a chance to express them. Her heart was and always had been entirely free from the pangs of love, and while his devotion was in a way quite flattering, the one insurmountable barrier was his family. Had he been more diplomatic he would never have told her his mother frowned at him when he danced twice with a poor girl.

"I am a poor girl," Alice thought, when he made the admission, "but I'll wear old clothes all my life before his haughty mother shall read him a lecture for dancing twice with me."

Ever since the day Mrs. Mears had related the village gossip to her she had thought a good many times about the cause of it, but to no one had she mentioned the matter. Her only associate, good natured Abby Miles, had never dared to speak of it, and Aunt Susan was wise enough not to.

Now that Frank and his fashionable sister were coming to Sandgate, Alice felt a good deal worried. Firstly, she knew her own stock of gowns was inadequate. While not vain of her looks, she yet felt his sister would consider her countrified in dress or else realize the truth that she was painfully poor. She had made the money her brother gave her go as far as possible. Her own small salary was not more than enough to pay current expenses. When the day and train arrived, and she had ushered her two guests to their rooms, her worry began. A trunk had come, and as she busied herself to help Aunt Susan get supper under way before she changed her dress she was morally sure Miss Nason would appear in a gown fit for a state dinner. But when she was dressed and went out on the porch, where her guests were, she found Miss Blanch attired in a white muslin, severe in its simplicity. It was a pleasant surprise, and at no time during their stay did Alice consider herself poorly clad. During the conversation that evening Blanch gave an interesting description of her life in the mountains, who were there, what gowns the ladies wore, the hops, drives, tennis, croquet and whist games, and when that topic was exhausted Alice turned to Frank and said, "Now, tell us about your trip."

"There is not much to tell," he answered in a disappointed tone. "The fact is, my yachting trip was a failure. I had a two weeks' trip all mapped out, no end of stores on board, and anticipated lots of fun, but it didn't materialize. The second day Bert got left on the island, and we didn't find him until the next day. In the meantime he had found a pretty girl and acted as if he had become smitten with her. Then we ran to Bar Harbor, and the rest of the boys found some girls they knew and decided that a gander cruise had lost its charms. So I threw up my hands and turned the Gypsy over to Bert, and for all I know or care he is using her to entertain his island fairy."

Alice joined with Blanch in a good laugh at Frank's description of his trip.

When the chitchat slowed down Alice said: "I don't know how to entertain you two good people in this dull place. There are mountains and woods galore and lots of pretty drives. And," looking at Frank, "I know where there is a nice mill pond full of lilies and an old moss covered mill and a miller that looks like a picture in story books. There is also a drive to the top of the mountain, where the view is simply grand. I have a steady going and faithful old horse, and we will go wherever you like."

"Do not worry about me, Miss Page," replied Blanch. "If I can see mountain and woods I am perfectly happy."

When the evening was nearing its close Frank begged Alice to sing, but she declined.

"Do you play or sing, Miss Nason?" she asked cautiously.

"Oh, please don't be afraid of me," was the answer, "I never touched a piano in my life. Once in awhile I join in the chorus, as they say, for my own amusement and the amazement of others, but that is all."

It wasn't all, for she played the guitar and sang sweetly. Finally Alice was persuaded to open the piano, and then out upon the still night air there floated many an old time ballad. After that she played selections from a few of the latest light operas that Frank had sent her and then turned away.

"Oh, don't stop now," exclaimed both her guests at once. "Sing a few more songs." Then, with almost an air of proprietorship, Frank arose and, going to the piano, searched for and found a well worn song. Without a word he opened it and placed it on the music rack. It was "Ben Bolt!" A faint color rose in Alice's face, but she turned and played the prelude without a word. When she had sung the first verse, to her surprise Blanch was standing beside her and joined her voice in the next one. When it was finished Frank insisted on a repetition, and after that all three sang a dozen more of the sweet old time songs so familiar to all. Then Alice left the room to bring in a light lunch, and Frank seized the opportunity to ask, "Well, sis, what do you think?"

"I think," she replied, "that you were foolish to go yachting at all. If I had been you I should have come up here in the first place, stayed at the hotel and courted her every chance I could. I am in love with her myself, and we haven't been here six hours."

Frank stepped up to her quickly and, taking her face in his hands, kissed her.

Two of the Extra People

By W. W. HINES

—Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure—

Sometimes they are called "supernumeraries," or, in derision, "supes," but stage land and the people themselves take more kindly to the more commonly used term "extra people."

In the big crowd of applicants for the position with the company which was to present the society comedy "My Lady Sylvia" were all sorts and conditions of men and women. The fact that the advertisement inserted by the stage manager in the morning newspapers had stated that each applicant must have evening clothes had not been sufficient to deter the man who slept on a park bench the night before from applying, and next to him in the line you might see the eager, boyish face of some well dressed stage struck young fellow from one of the acting schools.

On the big dark stage were crowded over 200 men and women, and from these twenty men and as many women were to be selected to take part in the ballroom scene. The stage manager passed rapidly from one to another. "Have you a dress suit?" he said to the men, and "Have you a ball gown?" to the women. In spite of the fact that the advertisement had mentioned these as absolutely requisite, fully half of the applicants did not own them, and those who did not were told to go at once. Then the stage manager picked out twenty men and twenty women whom he thought would be able to carry themselves in the ballroom scene without awkwardness.

The men were on one side of the stage and the women on the other. There was no light except that furnished by a single "spot light" set in the rear of the stage, and one could not see across it well enough to recognize even a friend.

Then began the rehearsal of the second act, in which the ballroom scene occurred.

"The scene, ladies and gentlemen," began the stage manager, "is laid in the ballroom of the Duke of Ellerslie. The stage settings and exits I will indicate by chairs. Here is the entrance to the conservatory and here to the supper room. At the rise of the curtain you are waltzing. When the music stops some of you go into the conservatory and some into the supper room, others stand and talk. When Archibald is denounced I want my picture this way."

AT THIS THE MAN STARTED AND LOOKED AT HER INQUIRINGLY.

And he began to group the people about the stage. In the supposed entrance to the conservatory he placed a man and a woman, who, he said, were supposed to be so interested in each other that they did not even look up when Archibald was charged with theft. "Now, you two people keep up a conversation. Count up to a thousand and back again if you can't think of anything to say to each other, but be animated and absorbed in each other."

Neither had noticed the other until then on the dimly lighted stage. And the first look, which brought recognition, caused each to start.

The woman spoke first, and with an attempt at lightness said:

"Who would have ever dreamed it possible that we should meet in such a strange place as this after we told each other goodby in Virginia? Where have you been and what have you been doing?"

"It is strange that we should meet at all," said the man. "I have been doing a little of everything and nothing well. I suppose you have entered one of the acting schools and have determined to try to realize your old dream of going on the stage?"

"Exactly. And you?"

"Oh, I am here because I need the $5 a week the part of a 'super' pays. Things have not gone well with me since I left Virginia. I made a futile effort to establish a law practice in Kansas, drifted to New York to try newspaper work, failed there and came here. This morning I counted up my assets and found that they consisted of $2 in cash and an indefinite prospect of a job on one of the afternoon newspapers. I suppose you know that I cut off all communication with the people at home?"

"And you know nothing of what has happened since you left?" asked the girl.

"Not a word. You know that I have no near relatives there, and when the trouble came I determined that I would cut my friends before they got a chance to cut me. That is an excellent plan," said the man in a cynical tone.

"And you had not heard of the death of my brother?" the girl continued in her questioning.

At this the man started and looked at her inquiringly. Her face was white, and her lips were trembling a little.

"No," he said softly. "I had not heard of that. When did he die?"

"He died very suddenly last year, but before he died he—he told the truth about that Martin matter to my father and me. We could not bear for justice's sake—and—and yours, to keep silence, so every one in Lexington knows now that he was guilty and not you. Finally we came to the conclusion that you must have died, and I—well, I suppose that I thought of the stage because there was nothing else for me to do. You know Uncle Jack left me some money, so I decided to come on here and study. A woman must have some interest in her life, and that seemed all that was left me."

"The first rehearsal is over," said the stage manager in a loud voice. "Report promptly at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning."

Then he came over to where the couple were standing talking to each other and said: "Both of you young people did admirably. You followed out my instructions to the letter. I like to see people take an interest in their work, and I am going to see if I cannot find a small speaking part for each of you. You are too clever to be wasted among the extra people."

The man and the woman looked at each other. There was a question in the eyes of the man and a happy answer in those of the woman.

"We will talk that over when we report in the morning, and, at any rate, we thank you for your compliment," said the man.

But neither of them showed up for the rehearsal next morning.

White Buffalo.

Old buffalo hunters of the western Kansas prairies used to tell of having seen and pursued white buffalo. There were white buffalo, albinos, such as are found at rare intervals in all the families of the animal kingdom, but the number of those which existed in fact and of those which existed purely in the imagination, says the Kansas City Journal, were in wonderful disproportion.

In 1873 old Ben Canfield, who roamed the plains, with his tall, gaunt wife for a companion, followed a herd of buffalo from the northern edge of what is now Oklahoma to the sand hills of Nebraska, thinking to kill a big white bull which he had seen in the herd. After three weeks of patient stalking Canfield did kill the bull, only to find that the whiteness of its appearance was due to a coat of whitewash.

An explanation of this phenomenon would not be needed by people familiar with the natural lime beds of western Kansas. The habit of the buffalo is to roll or wallow in every pool of water or mudhole to which he comes. Canfield's buffalo had simply been rolling in a bed of the native lime, which, when dried in the sun, coated his hide with a kind of plaster.

No doubt these lime holes account for many of the "white buffalo" so often reported by hunters.

Tact.

"You're an authority on tact, Turveydrop, aren't you?" said Miggs.

"I have some reputation in that direction."

"Well, what would you do under these circumstances? I took a lady friend to a matinee a few weeks back, and of course after the performance I offered her tea. She accepted, but to my horror I found I had only tenpence, and she ate at least 15 pennyworth."

"Under those circumstances," replied Turveydrop, "you should have explained that you would have to send an important telegram, and as soon as you got outside you should have left your watch with a friendly pawnbroker."

"Couldn't. He'd got it already."

"Then of course there was nothing for it but an explanation and a hint that enough to pay the bill would be treated as a debt of honor."

"Couldn't do that either. There was an old gentleman sitting at the table, and one can't explain a thing like that before strangers."

"Perhaps not. But what did you do?"

"Well, I watched an opportunity and took that old gentleman's bill and left him mine. His was only sevenpence."

"Mr. Miggs," said Turveydrop, "you need no instruction in that beautiful accomplishment—tact."

Two Ways to Get Strong.

There are two ways to get strong—the active and the passive. To sum it up with one brief concrete illustration, the active treatment would comprise such vigorous exercise of all the muscles of the body in the fresh, rejuvenating air and under the bright and healing sun as one might obtain in the railroad section gang. By this method you are able to relish and digest anything short of shoe pegs.

The passive method goes at it the other way about. Instead of exercising that one may eat, one eats that one may exercise. A diet is prescribed which is almost pure nutriment to begin with and has been so completely predigested that all one has to do is to swallow it down and the food is turned directly into power. By this method, if the billboards are to be believed, aged gentlemen become so frisky that they jump over eight foot fences just to work off their superfluous energy.—Eugene Wood in Everybody's.

Susan B. Anthony, who will represent America at the International Woman Suffrage Association's convention in Berlin, had an amazing experience with a little girl last month.

Miss Anthony was visiting this little girl's parents in the country. She sat one afternoon on the piazza reading, and the child flitted here and there in her white frock among the vines and flowers, now and then running to Miss Anthony restlessly. She was, it was plain, a little bored and unhappy. Finally she sat down on the steps and rested her chin on her hand. Very doleful was her expression.

"What is the matter, Alice?" said Miss Anthony.

"I don't know what to do," said the child. "I have no one to play with. Nobody loves me." She rose. "I guess," she said, "I'll go down to the orchard and eat worms. I ate three yesterday—two smooth ones and a woolly one."

MEN'S COMFORTABLE SUMMER CLOTHING.

Don't complain about this warm weather—it's seasonable, but dress in accordance. That's about the best way to get comfort these days. Every kind of summer clothing is here with prices at the lowest notch. Serge is the coolest and best wearing ordinary suit for summer—We have all the Flannel Suits, and coats and trousers you'd want to see, from the small price that good garments can be built for to as high as any man wants to pay—and so you can't accuse us of being partial to Serges. And by the way, the best test of a clothier is his thin clothing—Come and see how well we stand that test. The Quick & Robertson label is a marker of quality.

Serge Suits $5 to $15. Flannel Suits $3.75 to $8.50.

Thin Coats, Serge Coats and Vests, White and Fancy Wash Vests, White Duck Trousers—why not be comfortable when such cool clothing can be had. Alpaca is probably the best all round thin coat—blacks greys and hair lines $1.00 to $2.50.

UPON THE TENTED FIELD

NOTES OF INTEREST CONCERNING HASTINGS COUNTY REGIMENT.

The fine weather which the military camp at Barriefield has enjoyed together with the good rations and treatment they are receiving, has kept the soldiers in the best of humor and there is very little grumbling heard over the necessary hard work at drill.

The 49th is the strongest regiment on the grounds, 271 strong, and is reported as one of the best drilled and best dressed on the grounds. It has the only bugle band ever paraded from a rural corps in camp at Kingston and the largest number of competent buglers and drummers (sixteen) ever paraded by a rural regiment.

Dr. Alger, of the 49th, is winning an enviable reputation. As an entertainer he's "out of sight," although he generally manages to have a tent full of admirers. It is rumored that he is to compete for the position of champion "story-teller" of Central Ontario.

Lieut. Grier, Stirling, has clearly shown his ability as captain in taking Capt. McKee's duties while he is taking Capt. Slater's work as quartermaster.

W. G. Ketcheson, of No. 3, 49th Regiment, is the lucky captain, he and Capt. Bleecker, of Marmora, being the only ones to have two lieutenants in the field. Both captains claim to have had considerable trouble keeping ladies out of the ranks, so great were the attractions these men presented.

The Belleville company have had to sleep on one rubber blanket and three woollen ones per two men. The men are tented according to chums, about seven to a tent. They eat under cover, having a 30x30 foot tent and use granite dishes. Quite in style!

STEAMER BREAKS DOWN

ACCIDENT BEFEL THE ALEXANDRIA, WHICH DRIFTED DOWN THE RIVER.

Montreal, July 6. — The steamer Alexandria, of the Hepburn line, of Picton, Ont., broke down in the river near Sorel this morning. The steamer left Rochester on Sunday with a party of excursionists for Quebec. The steamer, after drifting down the river was pulled off by a tug. There was considerable excitement on board, but no accident occurred. The tourists will finish their trip to Quebec by rail.

Horse Fell Over an Embankment

Last evening a horse belonging to Mr. M. Doolittle, who resides on Murney street, injured itself to such an extent that it had to be destroyed. The animal was grazing in the rear of Mr. Doolittle's residence, where there is quite an embankment, and it fell over backwards to a depth of some feet. It sustained such severe injuries to its spine that its usefulness was gone and there was no prospects of its recovery. The horse was destroyed in order to put it out of misery.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

To Consider the Call,

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

CROPS NOT SO GOOD.

PROSPECTS IN MANITOBA FALL OFF A LITTLE, BUT THE TERRITORIES ARE ALL RIGHT.

Winnipeg, July 6. — The general tone of the C.P.R. crop report is not so favorable this week as last, more particularly in some portions of Manitoba. In many parts of the country the rainfall has been much heavier than was needed, and the grain on low-lying land has suffered accordingly. Where natural drainage is good, however, there has been but little damage, and the average growth is up to previous weeks. On high ground the crop is more favorable, and the standing grain is extremely heavy, showing excellent color and development. In the territories, where the rain has not been nearly so heavy, but little harm has been done.

OUR DISTRICT MINES.

AN AMERICAN MINING ENGINEER SPEAKS FAVORABLY OF THEM.

In the jubilee number of the Globe there is a paper by an American Mining Engineer on the mines of Hastings and East Peterboro. He speaks strongly of the mineral wealth of this district and regrets that it should not be exploited.

In reference to the gold and arsenic mine at Deloro, Hastings County, he says:—

"My next visit was in 1902, in company with other men interested in mining. We then spent some three weeks visiting various places, investigating prospects, some of which impressed us very favorably. We found gold-bearing arsenic ores in many widely scattered places. But arsenic associated with other metals in any ores is somewhat of a bug-bear to the average miner and metalurgist. We passed these by as not being worth attention, and were, therefore, very much interested in what we saw and learned at Deloro mine. Here we found a well-built and scientifically conducted mining plant, consisting of a twenty-stamp mill, an air compressing power plant, and other things in keeping. The mill was crushing about 2,000 tons a month of arsenopyrite, containing gold, and which is as difficult an ore to treat as can be found anywhere. Hence we were much gratified to be shown the inner workings of this plant. We found that about 90 per cent. of the gold value was saved from these ores, an operation we could not have believed possible had we not been shown convincing proofs thereof. This in itself is remarkably good work, but there still was another agreeable surprise awaiting us. We were next shown through the arsenic refinery, where the residue from the mill, consisting of the concentrated arsenopyrite 'mispickel,' was converted into a most valuable by-product. In that 80 to 90 tons of pure white arsenic was made and shipped monthly, and apparently at very low cost. Seeing this added much value to the arsenical ores we had seen at different places during our six weeks' trip."

* * * * * *

"I am familiar with the history of this mine for the past 30 years or ever since Mr. Gatling first started work on it, and know that it is the first and only place where arsenical ores have ever been treated successfully. The Deloro Company must also be credited with being the first to develop a method of manufacturing white arsenic on a commercial scale on the American continent. Others have tried, but failed."

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

RUSSIANS ATTACK IN DARKNESS.

Japanese, Twice Repulsed, Conquer at Last.

A Heavy Casuality List on Both Sides.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

London, July 7.—The Central news reports a fight between Russian troops, under Gen. Kashptalinsky, and a force of Japanese near Lentyasian.

The Russians made a sudden attack in darkness and during a heavy downpour of rain on the Japanese outposts. The Japanese casualities are reported to have numbered 1,000. Strong Japanese reinforcements came to the aid of the Japanese, but they were twice repulsed.

Finally, the Japanese made a flanking movement, and the Russians narrowly escaped being surrounded. Russian reinforcements then came up and the Czar's forces were enabled to retire. The Russian casualties were 300.

CURIOSITIES OF SIGHT.

Warriors in a Night Attack Black Their Faces Like Minstrels.

The whole world has lately been reading of torpedo attacks and how, through the black waters and in the shadow of night, one vessel can creep up and deal awful destruction to another. But few of those who have been reading about these attacks know what curious efforts are made to procure invisibility on the part of those who direct the deadly torpedoes.

In our own navy, even during the annual manoeuvres, there is one torpedo boat order that is all but unknown to the general public, and this order is, "All hands black faces!" When that order is given every soul on board the torpedo boat, from the chief officer to the lowest in rank of the men, blacks his face after the manner of the average "nigger" minstrels; indeed, the stock of pigments usually kept for the purpose is obtained from some purveyor of stage requisites. And the result is vastly effective, for, even on the blackest night, a white face can be almost seen at once, standing out from the surrounding gloom, by eyes that are pretty well accustomed to the darkness.

As far back as the days of Nelson the boarding parties that used to do such acts of desperate valor in cutting-out expeditions all had their faces blacked when a night attack was planned, and, however unheroic it may seem, every man nowadays going to what may be an awful death on a torpedo boat attack is as black as any sweep; even hands, arms, and neck being included in the blackening process.—Tit-Bits.

World's Record Shooting.

The Queen's Edinburgh Rifle Brigade have been declared the winners of an Imperial rifle match shot for in various parts of the King's domains, and have created a new world's record in rifle shooting.

Their team of ten, firing seven shots each at three ranges—200, 500 and 600 yards—made the remarkable score of 1,002, which is an average of over 100 points per man.

A score of 104, or one less than the possible, was made by Sergeant Ommundsen for the winners. This marksman won the King's prize at Bisley in 1901:

The following were the results:

1.	Queen's Edinburgh Rifle Brigade	1,002
2.	Bangalore Rifles	956
3.	13th Canadian Infantry	951
4.	Altcar Rifle Club	940
5.	2nd V.B. Liverpool Regiment	930
6.	Liverpool Rifle Club	915
7.	Rupanyup Rifle Club, Australia	909
8.	77th Canadian Regiment	904
9.	Natal Coast Rifle Association	902

Scholes Beats Favorite.

Henley-on-Thames, July 7.—(C.K.P.)—The main attraction on the regatta program yesterday was the meeting between L. F. Scholes, of the Don Rowing Club, Toronto, and F. S. Kelly, Oxonian, in the semi-final for the Diamond Sculls, in which the Canadian sculler defeated Kelly, the holder of the trophy, by four lengths. Time 9 minutes, 11 seconds.

Kelly shortly after the quarter-distance was passed rowed over into Scholes' water and kept there for a short distance. Scholes spurted and made Kelly get over to his own water. Then, when Scholes commenced to overhaul Kelly, the latter spurted, but it was no good and the failure to do so broke his heart, and from the half-distance on he was beaten and so completely done out that he had to be assisted out of his boat.

U.S. Populist Party.

Springfield, Ill., July 7.—Thomas E. Watson of Georgia, was unanimously nominated for president by the Populist Convention. The convention adjourned after nominating Thomas H. Tribbles of Nebraska for vice-president.

JOHN J. LONG DROWNED

Body of Collingwood Man Found in the Don River, Toronto.

Missing From the Home of His Brother, Thomas, in Toronto Since Early Monday Morning—Well-Known Shipowner Was Worried By Business Complications—Sketch of His Career—Collingwood Shocked.

Toronto, July 7.—Yesterday morning, at 11 o'clock, Charles Allen, 634 East Gerrard street, and David Stewart, 8 Trefann street, saw a body floating in the Don, near the Winchester street bridge. It was removed to the morgue by the police, and subsequently identified as that of John Joseph Long of Collingwood.

When the body was searched by the police in the morgue there was little found. A bunch of keys, a string of Roman Catholic beads, four car tickets and this telegram:

Toronto, June 22.
To John J. Long, care of Long Bros., Collingwood:
Mr. McCarthy telegraphs from St. Catharines, Edwards cannot reach Collingwood before Friday.
H.S. Osler.

Led to Identification.

This is the only paper found on the deceased that led to his identification.

Mr. Long arrived in the city on Saturday and went to the residence of his brother, Thomas, 536 Jarvis street. He attended church service in the morning, as was his habit. In the evening it was noticed he was not feeling well. He retired at 10 o'clock. At 3 o'clock in the morning Charles Long, his nephew, says he passed the deceased's room and noticed the door was closed. He was missed in the morning when the maid rapped on the door of his room.

Had Been in Poor Health.

The deceased had been in poor health for the past two years. As his brother told a friend, "he was a physical and mental wreck," supposed to have been caused by overwork and mind worry. He took a trip to Europe for several weeks, accompanied by his niece. He returned about a month ago. He was subject to spells of absent-mindedness, which came on him when least expected. He would appear to be all right, and, without a moment's notice, would lapse into a fit of forgetfulness.

Wandered to the Don.

It is supposed that he left the house of his brother early Monday morning, and not knowing where he was going, wandered down to the Don and fell into the river accidentally. That is Chief Coroner Johnstone's theory, who has investigated the case and decided an inquest is not necessary.

The body, after identification, was removed by Millard, the undertaker. It will be taken to Collingwood this morning at 8.45 on the Grand Trunk, in a special car; thence, to the family homestead. The funeral will take place on Friday. Those who will accompany the remains are: Mr. Thomas Long (brother) and wife; Charles Long (nephew), and wife, and Thomas P. Long, another nephew.

Mr. Long's Career.

The name of Mr. John J. Long is one of the best-known in the northern part of the Province. A member of the Collingwood firm, of which his brother, Mr. Thomas Long, is the senior partner, he has been identified for many years with the successful and extensive business operations of that concern. He has also been prominent in all Collingwood interests, and at one time was president of the Board of Trade there. He was a director of the Bank of Toronto, Confederation Life Company, Northern Navigation Company, vice-president Anglo-American Insurance Company, and the Collingwood Meat Company, president Collingwood Shipyard Company.

Collingwood Shocked.

Collingwood, July 7.—When the telephone message came to Collingwood announcing the death of John J. Long it created consternation through the town. The tidings were everywhere received with the deepest regrets. It is the severest blow Collingwood has ever had, was the general comment expressed by all classes in the community. For John J. Long is given credit by all as having done more for the town in its growth than any other man or thing. His wonderful ability for business and work, however, is also held responsible for his unfortunate demise.

JOHN TEMPLETON KILLED.

Kicked By a Horse and Crushed By a Wagon.

Shoal Lake, Man., July 7.—A sad fatality occurred here yesterday afternoon. John Templeton, a prominent farmer, and one of the pioneer settlers of the district, was driving a load of lumber out of town. His team took fright near the railway station and ran away. Templeton slipped in front of the load and was kicked by one of the horses. The wheels of the wagon passed over his chest, causing instant death. Mr. Templeton was a highly respected resident about 60 years of age, and unmarried. He was one of the Canadian farm delegates to England a year ago.

A Sturdy Canadian.

Toronto, July 7.—John Templeton was born in Newcastle, Durham County, and went west about thirty years ago. He leaves relatives in his native town. He was a man of exceptional talents, and a sturdy type of Canadian.

Drowned at London.

London, July 7.—George Delmont, a young man, aged 25 years, met death by drowning in the Thames River here last evening. In company with two other men, he went in swimming at the Adelaide street north bridge. He got beyond his depth, and, not being a swimmer, quickly sank. His companions made a heroic effort to save him, and in doing so, Henderson, one of them, nearly lost his life also. The body of Delmont was recovered some time afterwards. Deceased was a teamster engaged by W. Henderson, and came to this city only a short time ago from Dorchester, Ont.

Killed in Runaway.

Napanee, July 7.—While Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Price were driving through the Village of Newburgh yesterday the horse became frightened and ran away, killing Mrs. Price and breaking two of Mr. Price's ribs, besides seriously injuring him internally. Mr. Price lives a few miles back of Newburgh, and is a brother of Judge Price of Kingston.

HOIST DROPPED 60 FEET.

Six Working Girls at Peterboro Dropped With It—Three Hurt.

Peterboro, July 7.—At noon yesterday, when six of the working girls belonging to the dry goods establishment of Richard Hall & Sons took the elevator at the fourth storey, the cable suddenly parted and the lift fell to the basement, a distance of about 60 feet. Nora Fitzgerald suffered a broken arm and leg; Ida Sheran, severe injuries to the spine; Josephine Delaire, leg broken. The elevator boy had an arm broken. The injured were conveyed to the hospital, and it is not supposed that any are fatally hurt.

Struck By Trolley.

London, Ont., July 7.—Two small children, while playing on Dundas street last evening, ran in front of a Belt Line car, not noticing its approach. The conductor was unable to stop his car in time, as the girls sprang so suddenly in front. They were both struck by the full force of the car. When picked up the little girls were unconscious, and both are suffering from concussion of the brain. The unfortunate children are Lena McCullough and Edna Hardinger. Their recovery at present is doubtful.

Found at Port Rowan.

Detroit, July 7.—S. E. Mason of Port Rowan, Ont., has notified the Detroit police of the finding of the body of a man on the beach at that place. The remains, which had been in the water a long time, were those of a man 50 or 60 years of age, clean shaven and with short, gray hair. He was dressed in black cheviot, with gray overcoat; had $18.20 in cash in his pocket, a Waterbury watch and a pawn ticket, issued by Frank Forester, 16 East Seneca street, Buffalo, May 14. The ticket was for a diamond stud which had been pawned for $25.

Killed in Detroit.

Detroit, July 7.—Joshua Bobier of North Oxford, was struck by a trolley car at Detroit about 10 o'clock Monday morning, receiving injuries that caused his death a few hours later.

Two Killed.

Cripple Creek, Col., July 7.—A Short Line passenger car from a train west-bound from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek jumped the track Tuesday night near Cameron, eight miles from Cripple Creek, and was overturned. Dr. H. S. Torrance and T. P. Airheart, both well known citizens of Cripple Creek, were killed. Fifteen passengers were injured.

One Killed in Wreck.

Council Bluffs, Ia., July 7.—One man was killed and four seriously injured and fourteen freight cars were burned in a Chicago & Northwestern freight wreck at Woodbine, Ia., on Tuesday. Claude Dean of Dunlap, Ia., was killed.

Rescued a Dozen Children.

Boston, July 7.—A dozen children were rescued from a burning North-End tenement house here yesterday by Patrolman John Hanrahan and John Cronin, a resident of the vicinity. When all the children had been taken out Cronin started to go up to the third storey to rescue a cripple, John Ciccelo by name, but the police would not let him on account of the danger. Ciccelo jumped from a window to escape the flames and received injuries which, it is said, will probably cause his death. Two babies, thrown from the windows by their parents, were caught safely by policemen.

Premier Refused Hearing.

London, July 7.—In the House of Commons last night the Government succeeded in carrying through the first part of its closure program on the Licensing Bill, but Premier Balfour was denied a hearing, his frequent attempts to speak being drowned by loud cries of "Gagah!" Finally Mr. Balfour, after hopelessly facing the tumult, sat down. This is said to be the first time in a modern British Parliament when the Premier was refused a hearing on the floor of the House of Commons.

Allowed to Go.

Woodstock, July 7.—Fred. Bennett Boynton, the young Englishman, arrested for forging a cheque for $3.95 on the Hamilton Oak Tanning Co., was allowed to go on suspended sentence by Police Magistrate Ball yesterday. He stated that he had no recollection of committing the forgery, and blamed his trouble upon drink, which had ruined his life. Boynton is a man of good family, and a graduate of McGill University, but unable to resist the craving appetite for liquor.

Burglars at Brockville.

Brockville, July 7.—Burglars are still doing the grand in Brockville, as the stores of R. H. Smart, hardware, and A. E. Shaver, grocer, were broken into during the night. Both places were gone through, and a few revolvers of the latest pattern are among the stuff missing.

No Dissolution This Year.

London, July 7.—At a dinner given by Unionist members of the House of Commons last night, Premier Balfour announced that under no circumstances would there be a dissolution of Parliament this year, unless he should fail to secure the support of his colleagues.

A SEVERE ENGAGEMENT

Russians and Japs Fighting 25 Miles From Liaoyang.

Japs Continuing Their Advance With the Object of Cutting Off Mukden—Daring Exploit of the Japs Ended in Disaster—Torpedo Boats Entered Port Arthur Harbor and Were Sunk By Russian Guns.

London, July 7.—The Liaoyang correspondent of The Daily Telegraph, in a despatch dated July 7, 1 a.m., says: A battle is proceeding 25 miles from here. Numbers of wounded are being brought in from the mountains. Evidently the engagement is a severe one. It is believed that the Japanese are continuing their advance with the object of cutting off Mukden.

Japs Met Disaster.

St. Petersburg, July 7.—A few nights ago Admiral Togo attempted to repeat the Japanese exploit with torpedo boats at Wei-Hai-Wei, during the China-Japanese war, by sending torpedo-boat destroyers into the harbor of Port Arthur for the purpose of sinking ships at their anchorage, but the attempt ended in disaster.

Four torpedo-boat destroyers succeeded in creeping into the harbor which was not protected by booms, but only one escaped, two were sunk by the shore batteries, and one was crippled. The reckless bravery of the Japanese in going to almost certain destruction excites nothing but admiration here.

The channel at Port Arthur is so tortuous and strewn with wrecks without, that evidently it was regarded as unnecessary to use a boom. On account of the difficulty of getting into the harbor the feat is considered in naval circles to be fully as daring as that of the Japanese at Wei-Hai-Wei, where Japanese torpedo boats, in a storm, and covered with ice, were jumped over the booms protecting that harbor, and destroyed Chinese warships.

Russian Squadron in Port.

So far as known, the Japanese torpedo-boat destroyers did not even succeed in launching torpedoes. Another lot of naval reserves, numbering 2,000, will be called out shortly. The admiralty has no confirmation of the report from Liaoyang of an engagement between the Vladivostock squadron and Japanese warships off Gensen. There is good reason to believe that the Russian squadron is safe back in port.

It was announced from Tokio on July 3 that a belated report from Admiral Togo recorded a desperate and successful torpedo attack at the entrance of Port Arthur during the night of June 27, in which a Russian guardship and a Russian torpedo-boat destroyer were sunk.

The exact date of the attack is not ascertainable, but it is said to have occurred Saturday. No further details are obtainable. Though it is believed other destroyers participated in the attack, only four, however, succeeded in getting in.

Hand to Hand Fight.

Tokio, July 7.—Supplemental despatches indicate that the fight at Motienlien Pass on July 4 was a desperate hand-to-hand fight affair.

A majority of the Japanese injured were wounded by bayonets. The Russians surrounded the outposts of the Japanese, who fought until relief came.

The Russians left fifty-three dead and forty wounded on the field. The Japanese left nineteen killed and thirty-eight wounded. It is believed that the Russians sustained greater losses during the pursuit than in action.

Bloody Contest.

Gen. Kuroki's headquarters in the field, via Fusan, July 6.—On July 4 two battalions of Russians attempted to break through the Japanese outposts at the northern entrance to Motien Pass. Before daylight they surrounded an outpost of forty men at the foot of a hill and charged the trench above. A bloody encounter with bayonets, lasting a quarter of an hour, ensued. The Russians attacked the trench three times, but were driven up the valley by a Japanese reinforcement, leaving many dead and wounded. An observer saw fifty lying in front of the trench.

British Steamer Held.

Vladivostock, July 7.—The British steamer Cheltenham was brought in here July 2, and is now awaiting trial by the prize court.

FIRED BLANK SHOTS.

But Russian Volunteer Fleet Steamer Gets Through Bosphorus.

Constantinople, July 7.—The Russian volunteer fleet steamer St. Petersburg, which passed through the Bosphorus from the Black Sea yesterday morning, in company with the Sevastopol, the latter flying the Red Cross, and with her hull painted white, was stopped in the Bosphorus by blank shots from the Turkish forts, fired without previous warning. The incident threatened to cause friction, but after a delay of several hours, explanation were exchanged between the Russian embassy and the porte. The vessel was then allowed to proceed, Vladivostock being her declared destination.

A Novice at the Business.

"I suppose you had a perfectly lovely time at Wexford's house party?"

"No, it was a fizzle. Mrs. Wexford has so little tact. She was always arranging it so that the men would have to pair off with their own wives."—Exchange.

Emotion turning back on itself and not leading on to thought or action is the element of madness.

MIKADO'S SOLDIERS ARE ONLY FIVE MILES FROM KAICHOU.

Japs Swarmed Over the Mountain Crests Early Wednesday.

Russian General Chirikoff Tried to Check Them, But Was Forced to Fall Back—Gen. Samsonoff's Heroic Stand Also Futile — Jap Gunboat Blown Up By a Mine — Cholera Reported in Manchuria.

Tatchekiao, July 8.—The Japanese swarmed over the mountain crests early yesterday morning and advanced on Kaichou, compelling General Chirikoff with the centre of the Russian vanguard to fall back. A whole brigade of Japanese, with masses of cavalry, followed and occupied the village of Nantay, driving out two companies of Russian infantry and two companies of Cossacks, who were entrenched there. The Japanese arrived within five miles of Kaichou. It was then nightfall. Gen. Samsonoff made a heroic attempt to check the Japanese, galloping out with guns to shell the Japanese left and inflicting great loss on them. But fearing his retreat would be cut off, he fell back and is now holding Kaichou. Gen. Chirikoff's force is stationed southeast of Kaichou.

Jap Gunboat Lost.

Washington, July 8.—The Japanese Legation has received the following telegram from Tokio, dated yesterday: "Admiral Togo reports that on July 5 our gunboat Kaimon, while on a special mission in the waters outside of Talienwan, in a dense fog, struck a Russian mine and sunk. Three officers, including Commander Takashi and nineteen petty officers and men are missing. The rest were saved."

Cholera in the East.

Washington, July 8.—A cable report from United States Minister Allen at Seoul points to the existence of a great danger to both belligerents in Manchuria. He says that he has learned from a missionary surgeon that cholera has crossed Manchuria and appeared at Antung.

Jap Provisions Captured.

Liaoyang, July 8.—According to a trustworthy report, Major-General Mistchenko, on July 5th, captured a large convoy of Japanese provisions, principally of rice. In the convoy were fifty head of cattle. In view of the extreme heat, most of the moving of troops is done at night. Special sanitary measures are enforced with rigor in all the camps, and an abundant supply of boiled drinking water is furnished the soldiers. Up to the present time, the health of the Russian troops remains good.

Fenian Raid Medals.

London, July 8.—(C. A. P.)—Colonial Secretary Lyttelton, replying to E.R. Moon, M.P., as to why the services of those detailed from the naval services of Canada against the Fenians in 1868, were not awarded the medal, said the medals given were in 1866, and 1870, but it was not considered desirable to grant the medal to the men who defended the Dominion frontier in other years, since their services amounted to the policing of the frontier, and not to actual military operations.

TOUCHED A LIVE WIRE

Tragic Taking-Off of a Young Railway Fireman.

He Was Watching Crowds Below in the Queen Street Subway in Toronto and Placed His Hand on a Live Arc Light Wire—Staggered Back and Died Before the Doctor Called Could Finish Examination.

Toronto, June 8.—While leaning over the guard rail at the north side of the Queen street subway last night at 11 o'clock, Percy Smith of Wiarton, a young fireman on a Grand Trunk west-bound extra freight, touched a live wire and was killed.

His engine, No. 518, was hauling an extra freight from Palmerston to York. Engineer Best and Conductor Bender were in charge of the train and they arrived in York yesterday morning. They were returning to Palmerston last night and registered at North Parkdale Station at 10.20. Their orders there were to sidetrack for an east-bound regular freight and in the meantime they were taking on water. Smith and his engineer had left the engine and were standing on the west side of the track, looking down into the subway at the passers-by.

At this point, on the north side of the subway, there is an arc lamp and the wires pass within a few feet of the little iron guard rail that runs along the side of the subway masonry. The wires are insulated and they run diagonally over the rail. Smith placed his hand on the wire and staggered back with a cry.

Best ran to his assistance, but Smith brushed him aside. "I'm all right, I'm all right," he said, but immediately his limbs began to twitch convulsively, and Best made him lie down. A cup of water was given him, but he spit it out. Meanwhile a messenger had been sent to summon Dr. Harris. When the latter arrived Smith was alive, but the doctor had scarcely finished a hurried examination when the unfortunate man expired.

The body was taken to the undertaking establishment of A. M. Craig & Co., and an examination showed only one wound, on the right thumb. It was a slight burn, such as might have been caused by a match.

Smith had only been on the road as fireman for about a month, and this being his first trip with Driver Best, the latter knew little about him. He was about 21 years of age, and lived in Wiarton.

The remains will be conveyed to Wiarton as soon as the young man's relatives can be communicated with.

Fatal Railway Crossing.

Brockville, July 8.—George Miller, a G.T.R. trackman, living near Mallorytown, was struck and killed yesterday morning by the G.T.R. local passenger train from Belleville, which reaches here at 10 a. m. He was driving across the track near his home. The horse was killed and the rig demolished. Miller was thrown some distance, alighting head first on a pile of rails, and died soon after being picked up. He was 26 years of age, and leaves a widow and child.

Three Northwest Drownings.

Winnipeg, Man., July 8.—Bryce Urquhart, aged 7, while playing on a raft, fell off and was drowned in the Red River yesterday morning.

A C. P. R. sectionman named Thomson was enjoying a swim in the River at Plum Coulee when he was seized with cramps and was drowned. The body is being sent to St. John, N.B., the home of the deceased.

Edmonton, N.W.T., July 8.—While bathing in the Saskatchewan Wednesday afternoon, James Elliott, 18 years old, was carried off his feet by the swift current and drowned.

Three Scalded to Death.

Petoskey, Mich., July 8.—The boiler of a saw-mill at Wahmenee blew up yesterday, killing William Reed, William Franks and Engineer Thomas Dickerson. John Fortune was scalded so terribly that he may die. All are young men.

Hunter Found Dead.

Quebec, July 8.—A hunter named Jas. Cole, aged 70 years, was found dead on the docks in the southeast of Bic Island by a hunter named Tiloute Noreau, of Esquimaux, who was on the hunt for porpoises. The deceased man's boat was found adrift, and in it was the dead man's rifle. Cole had been dead for a week or more, and the body was somewhat decomposed.

"Death By Accident."

Sundridge, July 8.—At the inquest held here Wednesday night on the death of Robert Woods, the farmer who was accidentally shot by Ephraim Paisley, another farmer, in mistake for a deer, Coroner Dr. Barber of Burke's Falls presided, Crown Attorney Haight prosecuted and D. R. McLean appeared for Mr. Paisley, towards whom evidence tended as the person who did the shooting. The jury, after two hours' deliberation, delivered the verdict, "Death by accident."

Nothing Announced.

Sault Ste. Marie, July 8.—The directors of the Lake Superior Co., after looking over the plants, have been holding meetings here yesterday afternoon and evening, but at the close of last night's meeting had nothing to announce regarding the appointment of a general manager or plans for the operation of the works.

Use Your Eyes
Do Not Abuse Them.

Strength comes by use that trains but that does not strain. If there is a hint or a sign of strain, if there are spots before the eyes, at times, if there is a headache or pain about the eyes, if there is a dizziness or letters become double or mixed, then you are injuring your eyes every day. These defects may seem small, yet if left to themselves they will grow and the only thing that will stop them is proper glasses, that is the kind we give. We give the examination that can leave no defect undiscovered. Consultation free.

Tennyson as a Carpet Cleaner.

Tennyson appeared once in the character of carpet cleaner. Calling on some friends and finding them absent, he wrote them a polite note, but had the misfortune to overturn the ink bottle upon the beautiful white Persian carpet. Frantic, he appealed for help to the servant. She, suddenly recollecting that new milk will remove ink when wet, seized a can of the creamy liquid which happened to have been just left by the milkman. She upset the can on the large black pool and set about rubbing and scrubbing the stain.

Down went Tennyson on his hands and knees, rubbing and scrubbing also, in an agony of suspense lest his friends should return, which he afterward said "reached the infinite." Every trace of ink was removed, and the servant was rewarded with a five shilling piece and the poet's "God bless you!"

SCOTT DID NOT RESIGN.

Latest advices from Ottawa say the Hon. R. W. Scott, Secretary of State, has not resigned. He has taken the snubbing of the Premier like a "little man," and hangs on to office like a hungry leech to a fresh piece of flesh.

When questioned in the Commons as to the correctness of the Hon. R. W. Scott's statement that Judge Britton had been instructed not to make any report or finding upon the effect which the granting of the Treadgold concession had had upon the gold mining industry in the Yukon Territories, Laurier replied that he could not answer the question until he had seen his colleagues.

The next day Sir Wilfrid informed the House that the Secretary of State had written to Judge Britton, that as the Treadgold concession had been cancelled, there was no necessity for his making a report; that this was done without consulting his colleagues and without the consent of Council, and that so soon as the fact was brought under the notice of the Cabinet the order was cancelled and the judge instructed to prepare his report and send it in. When, no one knows. That it will be favorable to the Government no one doubts. Judge Britton had pronounced upon the question before his appointment. To suppose that he would change his views upon the subject, judging from his attitude upon the subject when in the Commons, would be absurd, at least to those who know him.

The childlike simplicity of the Secretary of State in this matter is truly refreshing. There was neither sense nor reason in the attempt to suppress a report. In the language of a contemporary, "The Government has plenty of well tried methods of suppressing documents which are not faverable to the Government, and Senator Scott's innovation is quite uncalled for.

"He might have received the report and marked it 'confidential.'

"Or he might have put it in a pigeonhole and then told the Senate that he had brought down everything in connection with the Treadgold case 'without any equivocation whatever,' as Sir Wilfrid did in the Grand Trunk application for aid to construct branch railways.

"Why resort to new tricks before the old ones are worn out?"

TIMELY TOPICS.

TIMELY RHYMES.

The Grits are keeping very mum
Though mischief they are bent on.
But pshaw! They'll get no candidate
To beat the man from Trenton.

The extraordinary interest and enthusiasm displayed yesterday by the electors of West Hastings, as exemplified by their attendance at the convention called to nominate a candidate for the Legislature, may fairly be taken as a sign of the times. The electors are heartily sick of the corrupt Ross crew, and are determined to spare no effort to turn them out. It is a fact that never, in the recent history of the Riding, has there been so much interest displayed or so large an attendance at a convention when an election was not even in sight.

And the cause is easy to see. Honest men have at last been wakened from their lethargy, and are determined to put an end to the bribery, ballot-stealing and filching of public moneys which have for so long sullied the fair name of Ontario and caused it to be a byword. All over the province the same story is told and the same interest and enthusiasm displayed. The men of Ontario have been long suffering, but they evidently are wakened up in earnest this time.

The nomination of Mr. M. B. Morrison, M.P.P., was, of course, expected. That gentleman's excellent record in the Legislature, his popularity and business acumen have caused not only the general electorate, but those in high places, to look on him as an ideal member. The men of West Hastings could have chosen no better standard bearer than the War Horse of Trenton, and there is every reason to believe that his majority will be a comfortable one, and larger than ever before.

One of the most pleasing incidents of the convention was the election of Mr. Tom Ketcheson, of Sidney, to the office of President. Mr. Ketcheson comes of rare old fighting stock, and his ancestors have made many sacrifices for the cause of Liberal-Conservatism. In electing this aggressive and progressive young Sidney man to the presidency of their association the men of West Hastings did well. In honoring him they honored themselves. The other officers were also well chosen.

Our old friend, Mr. Corby, as usual, made a rousing speech, enthusing the audience in a way peculiar to himself. No use talking, it takes "Harry" to wake the boys up.

The remarks of the various speakers were for the most part short and in excellent taste, that of Mr. Porter being a seathing indictment of the Laurier Government. Mr. Porter was in fine form, and never, in this city, spoke better, if as well. The way his remarks about Lord Dundonald were received by the convention was deeply significant. It is a long time since the loyal men of Canada were so stirred by anything as they have been by the picayune and shameful treatment of that gallant soldier and gentleman, Lord Dundonald.

And one little incident about the convention may very well close these remarks. The hall was decorated with small Union Jacks, across the face of which was printed the words, "Victory Flag." In many instances the outer edges of the flags drooped so that the first three letters of the first word were hidden, and the legend read, "Tory Flag," and who will say that the Conservative party is not the one having the best right to claim the Union Jack as their own? There are many honorable and loyal men in the Liberal party, but can they, while they follow and render allegiance to Laurier, he of the Saskatchewan musket; he who openly declared that the dream of his life was Canadian independence, he who hobnobbed with the men who openly rejoiced at the temporary success of the Boers, when they were killing loyal men of this great Empire, and lastly, he who taunted a noble Scottish soldier and gentleman with being a "foreigner," can they, we say, lay claim to belonging to the party of the Union Jack? Nay, nay! The "blooming old rag" in Canada, is a "Tory flag." No doubt about that.

No. 2 school, situated at the corner of Octavia and Catherine Sts., is to change principals when the glad vacation time is over. Mr. C. W. Dafoe, principal for many years, is to retire, and his place will be taken by Mr. D. Barrager, at present principal of No. 1, or Canifton St. School. Mr. Dafoe has had a long and honorable service, and his many friends will wish him a calm and peaceful journey through the evening of his life, after the toil and turmoil of his pedagogue days. In Mr. Barragar No. 2 school will have a thoroughly up-to-date and efficient principal, under whose guidance the temple of learning should flourish like a green bay tree. The new principal of Canifton street school has not yet been selected. The change noted above was the only one made in the teaching staff.

Hamilton people consumed 3 per cent. less water last June than they did in June, 1903. Which leads one to wonder what the Spectator man is drinking nowadays.

The township of Ernesttown passed a by-law to purchase $20,000 worth of Ontario Electric Railway Company bonds by a majority of 268. The total vote was only 348. It looks as though the good people of Ernesttown were quite in earnest about wanting the railway.

The state of affairs in Cape Breton at the present moment is truly deplorable. Hundreds of men are prevented from working by an organized gang of labor unionists. Troops are pouring into that part of Canada to preserve order and protect those who are willing to earn bread for their families. Where this state of affairs is to end no one knows. Certainly not until both political parties join to effect a remedy.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTES.

Mr. O'Flynn's new steam yacht will be launched to-morrow afternoon at Jack Roblin's shipyard. It promises to be quite an interesting event.

Messrs. S. W. Vermilyea, W. B. Riggs, Jas. Thompson and James Hurst have had excellent sport fishing at Eagle Lake, near Coe Hill, in the northern part of the county. They caught 47 lake trout, which weighed from 10 to 16 pounds apiece, and, to make the story more binding, brought the goods back with them. They were on exhibition this afternoon at a butcher's shop in this city. Prof. Riggs has a beautiful crop of tan and is smiling as though he had just sold a piano.

The English Amateur Athletic Association publishes this paid announcement in the sporting papers: "The attention of all clubs and sports management bodies and competitors is drawn to the fact that hotel expenses are not allowed to be paid by the said clubs and sports management bodies to or on behalf of competitors competing at meeting except championships and inter-club competitions." They draw the amateur line pretty tight over there.

Live Lord Used Dead Man's Writ.

A singular blunder which will necessitate a re-introduction of Lord Henniker to the House of Lords and his taking the oath a second time was discovered the other day.

It appears that the writ of summons given to the last Lord Henniker was never used, he being at the time Governor of the Isle of Man. He died, and when his son, the present peer, called at the House for the writ, the officials found one in the name of Lord Henniker, and not knowing it had been prepared for the father handed it to the son. He presented the writ and was introduced to the House and signed the Parliamentary roll.

The fact that he got the wrong writ was found out because the Christian name of the father was different from that of his son, for which reason the whole ceremony of being introduced to the House of Lords and taking the oath will have to be gone through afresh.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

The Intelligencer business office closes on Saturday at 5 o'clock. Customers will please bear this in mind.

A delightful old gentleman is Mr. W. R. Frith, R.A., the famous painter of "The Derby Day," "The Railway Station," and many other celebrated pictures. A trifle bent with the weight of years, he is eighty-five, though anything but decrepit, slight of frame, and of no great stature, with bushy, white hair, brushed back from a great forehead, a ruddy complexion, an aquiline nose, blue eyes, wonderfully keen and alert, and a whimsical smile, he is just such a character as Dickens would have loved to paint, which recalls the fact that Mr. Frith painted one of the best portraits ever done of the great novelist. Mr. Frith delights in showing visitors the copy of an old Dutch engraving he made when a boy, and telling the story of how it led to his adopting art as a profession, and the sequel. Mr. Frith's father, anxious to know whether his son, then about fourteen years old, had any prospects as an artist, submitted the copy in question to the verdict of a number of distinguished painters foregathered at a dinner party. The verdict was favorable, and so the boy became a painter. Years afterwards he met Mr. Chalon, R.A., who had been one of the judges on that momentous evening. Showing him the copy reminded him of the incident, which Mr. Chalon had forgotten. "Do you mean to say I advised you to become a painter on such evidence as that?" cried the R.A.; "I ought to be ashamed of myself!"—M.P.

"Bobs" as a Speaker.

Notes often save a man from disaster, as they did the late Commander-in-Chief when he made his maiden speech in the House of Lords. As if to prove that physical courage has little to do with the successful accomplishment of such an ordeal, Lord Roberts was obviously nervous, and had not been speaking more than a couple of minutes when he totally forgot what he had intended to say. He began a search for his manuscript, which was of course in the last pocket in which he looked. And having found the right place in his notes he frankly read the rest of them to the House, who cheered him more loudly than they are accustomed to cheer in that august chamber. —London Chronicle.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and while especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

Temperance Affects Clubs.

The sudden closing a few days ago of the Junior Army and Navy Club, London, is significant of the condition of other West End clubs.

One cause of low club vitality lies in the remarkable fact that most of the West End clubs are face to face with a steady decline in the sale of wines and spirits. This seems to have originated about four years ago in the preference shown for light beer of German name if not made in Germany, and almost simultaneously with the introduction of barley water flavored with lemon as a summer beverage. The profit on ale and non-intoxicants is of course not so large as that on wine or spirits.

But apart from new and cheaper kinds of beverage, the clubman of to-day is far more temperate. In both drinking and eating he studies what he calls his liver, and endeavors to ward off a tendency to gout. Dieting among the well-to-do classes has become almost a craze in some quarters.

Club committees are face to face with a serious problem. With the high rents they pay, the receipts for food and drink are a very necessary supplement to the subscriptions, an increase in which is being seriously contemplated by more than one committee.

London's Budget.

Lord Welby the other day laid before the London County Council his financial statement for the year 1904-5. The following tables gives the estimates of revenue and expenditure—both this year nearly doubled on account of the council becoming the educational authority:

Revenue	£8,575,451
Ordinary	4,510,834
Education	4,064,617
Expenditure	8,640,226
Expenditure	8,540,226
Education	8,540,969

The estimated and actual revenue and expenditure for the past year were as follows:

	Estimated.	Actual.
Revenue	£4,637,798	£4,725,595
Expenditure	4,703,270	4,601,813

Bull Pups.

An insurance company in London will insure any animal but a bull pup. Some of these canine risks were once taken at a high rate and the bull pups died. The premium was doubled and more risks were accepted. Still the bull pups died. Now there has been no business in this direction for some years.

Had Misjudged Him.

"Does your father ever kiss your mamma, Willie?" asked the lady who had once been the gentleman's sweetheart.

"Yes, every morning when he goes away to the city."

"Dear me! And to think that I once doubted his courage!"

Killed by Lump of Coal.

Port Arthur, June 10.—Shortly before noon yesterday, George Malik, a Hungarian employe at the coal docks at Fort William, met his death in a horrible manner. He was assisting in the hold of the steamer Newmount, which was discharging a cargo of coal at the C.P.R. dock, when a large lump of coal dropped from a clamshell bucket, striking him squarely on the top of the head, shattering his skull and dashing out his brains. Death was instantaneous, and Dr. Hamilton, who happened to be close by, merely had to verify the fact of death.

Fifty Years on Lloyd's.

Presentations to journalists, like those to other individuals, are, no doubt, common enough (says The Westminster Gazette); but that of a Chippendale writing cabinet made to Mr. Catling on Tuesday was quite out of the ordinary, inasmuch as it was given by the editorial, composing, and reading staffs of Llyod's Weekly News in celebration of the jubilee of Mr. Catling's connection with the paper, "to mark their appreciation of his qualities as chief and friend."

It was in 1854 that Mr. Catling, then, as he said in acknowledging the gift, a "rough, raw country lad," commenced his engagement upon the paper as a "turnover" hand. "However," he added, "I did not come from the country with the idea of going back to it. There was no 'back to the land' cry in those days." He had come to stay; and this week marks his fiftieth year on the paper—unbroken in service, but marked by the rise of the "turnover" hand to the post of editor, when, in 1884, he succeeded Blanchard Jerrold, who, in his turn, had followed his brilliant father, Douglas Jerrold, in 1857. It was in 1852 that Jerrold became editor; two years later young Catling joined the staff, and from that day to this the connection has continued.

Made Believe It Was a Bee.

Lady Henry Somerset one day visited a hospital and saw a little crippled boy.

The doctors were changing the plaster cast on his crippled limb, an operation which the surgeons said was extremely painful.

Yet the brave little fellow kept perfectly still, without wincing or making any noise except a queer low buzzing sound with his mouth.

After the doctors left, Lady Somerset asked him how he could possibly stand it.

"That's nothin'," he answered. "Why, I just made believe that a bee was stingin' me. Bees don't hurt very much, you know, and I kept buzzin' because I was afraid I'd forget about it's being a bee if I didn't."

The little fellow's courage impressed Lady Henry wonderfully, and from that time on she became devoted to children—especially sick and crippled ones.

A Bad Place in Court.

At a circuit court in an English county town a young countrywoman was under examination.

"Now, my good girl," said the advocate, "you say you were near the spot when the prisoner at the bar committed the act. Was any one with you at the time?"

"Yiss, yiss, my lord ant atvocate, my sweetheart was wis me."

"Courting, I suppose?" was again asked. "Is he here? We want corroborative evidence."

"Yiss, my atvocate ant lord; shust ootside."

"We had better call him into court," here remarked the judge.

"No, no, my lord!" cried the witness. "Gootness, no! I can hartly get him to court me when we're alone, ant I'm sure he won't court me here afore you all."

"Quincy Tufts."

Lord Carnarvon, during his visit to the United States last year, took a commendable interest in all things. He was passing one day through a small Eastern town when he noticed the shop of a man called Quincy Tufts. Mr. Tufts was his name upon his sign in huge letters, and Lord Carnarvon misunderstood that odd name. He imagined that it represented some interesting object which he had never seen. Accordingly, entering the shop, the distinguished foreigner said to the proprietor: "Pray, sir, what are quincy tufts? Show me some, won't you?"

Dinners in the Sixteenth Century.

State banquets became very elaborate and expensive in the earlier half of the sixteenth century, which was the period of pageants and mumming. Excesses in feasting in Edward III.'s reign were so great that the King framed rules forbidding any common man to have dainty dishes or costly drinks at his table. He did not, however, practice economy in his own household, for the marriage feast of his third son, Lionel, Duke of Clarence, was exceedingly sumptuous. There were thirty courses to it, and the fragments sufficed to feed a thousand people.

HEROIC HEART "FOOD"

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the heart is heroic because in cases of heart disease seemingly beyond all human aid it goes to the very brink of the "Black River" and snatches from it the heart-sick victim.

In a trice it allays pain—in a twinkling it gives strength and vigor and it works a quick and permanent cure as by magic. It is the one great heart remedy which rightly bears the crown of supremacy and on which is inscribed the life words, "It never fails." Thirty minutes after taking the first dose, the sick heart forgets its pain. Try it. 43

Newfoundland the Hitch.

London, July 8.—(C.A.P.)—The Paris correspondent of The Daily Mail wires that the hitch in the ratification of the Anglo-French convention is due to the fact that difficulties have arisen over the question of Newfoundland. France has little confidence in the good intentions of the Newfoundland Government towards those French fishermen. The Government of the Republic demands the free exercise of the rights of its citizens to fish in Newfoundland water and permission to obtain bait on the coast of the island. Lord Lansdowne and M. Cambon, each assisted by two technical advisers, are actively engaged in seeking a solution of this thorny question.

Sir Robert Bond expects to leave on the 20th inst. to return to Newfoundland. The Standard's Paris correspondent says no one in Paris impugns the complete good faith of the British Government, but Sir Robert Bond's remarks have aroused distrust regarding the possible action of the Newfoundland authorities, whose intentions are believed to be opposed to the views of the French Government.

Bryan Given Great Oration.

St. Louis, Mo., July 8.—The Democratic national convention yesterday adopted the report of the committee on rules, credentials and permanent organization. During the day several speeches were made, chief of which was W. J. Bryan's effort to overthrow the report of the credential committee and seat contesting delegates from Illinois. The controversy was ended by the rejection of minority report of the committee by a vote of 647 to 299. Though Mr. Bryan's speech and his appearance on the floor of the convention were cheered far beyond any previous demonstration, the fact made few votes.

MUSKOKA CONSERVATIVES.

Mr. William Wright of Huntsville Chosen As Standard-Bearer.

Bracebridge, July 8.—The first Conservative convention for the new electorate riding of Muskoka in the House of Common was held yesterday afternoon in the Town Hall, and was attended by a representative gathering of delegates from all parts of the riding.

All the old officers of the association were re-elected, and the following names were placed in nomination: John Thompson, Moses Dickie, D. E. Bastedo, H. S. May, F. Ormsby, John McMillan, Dr. Williams, S. H. Armstrong, O. M. Arnold, J. R. Higgins, T. E. Godson and William Wright. These gentlemen allowed their names to go before the convention: O. M. Arnold, T. E. Godson, J. R. Higgins, Harry May and William Wright. Of the 77 votes cast, Godson received 24 and Wright 36 on the first ballot. On the second ballot William Wright received 45 and T. E. Godson 32. On motion of Messrs. Godson and Higgins, the nomination of William Wright of Huntsville was made unanimous.

In accepting the nomination, Mr. Wright said that he felt keenly the honor that had fallen upon him. He then addressed the convention on the issues of the day.

To Bring "Canada" Back.

Montreal, Que., July 8.—Captain Knowlton, Chief Officer Milne and ten men will leave this week for England to bring back the Dominion Government fishery protection steamer "Canada," which was recently launched at the Vickers-Maxim Shipyards at Barrow, England. The steamer requires a crew of 60 men, and the required number will be made up in England simply to bring the vessel out. The permanent crew will be engaged on this side when the vessel returns. Captain Knowlton has hitherto been in command of the Government steamer "Osprey." It is as yet unknown who will command the steamer "Canada" permanently. Commodore Spain arrived in the city yesterday afternoon to make final arrangements for the party. The "Canada" is destined for the fishery protection and preventive work on the Nova Scotia coast.

Opening of a Lift Lock.

Peterboro, July 8.—One of the greatest events in the history of the Town of Peterboro will be the opening of the lift lock on the Trent Canal next Saturday afternoon. Hon. Mr. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals, who will be accompanied by Sir William Mulock and upwards of 100 members of Parliament and Senators, will formally open the lock at 2 o'clock. All arrangements have been made by a joint committee of the town and county to entertain the visitors, the arrangements including a luncheon and a sail over the lock and down the Otonabee River.

Mind is the beginning of civilization, but the ends and fruitage thereof are of the heart.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

[illegible] the old mill and spent the entire forenoon gathering lilies and watching the great wheel that dripped and clattered between its moss grown walls. It was a curiosity to Blanch, for never in her life had she seen one of those old time landmarks, now so rare. That afternoon they drove to the mountain's top and saw the sunset, only to be late home to Aunt Susan's tea biscuit and cold chicken, and having a surprising appetite. The next day they made a picnic trip to another mountain, leaving the horse halfway up and walking the rest of the way. At noon they returned, and beside a cold spring that bubbled beneath a rock they opened their lunch baskets. Then they picked flowers, hunted for wintergreen and decked the horse and wagon with ferns and wreaths of laurel—only simple country pleasures, it is true, but they at least had the charm of newness for two of the party. That evening they sang all sorts of songs from gospel hymns to comic operas, and Blanch showed in so many ways that she admired her new found friend that there was no further restraint.

"I wish you would stay with me until my school begins, Blanch," said Alice at the close of the evening. "If you knew how lonely I am, I am sure you would."

"I might be persuaded to make a longer visit next summer," was the answer, "if you will return this visit next winter. Will you?"

"I won't promise now," answered Alice. "I am afraid I should be out of place in your society. I'm only a country girl, you know."

"I shall feel hurt if you don't," responded Blanch.

"I should like to see that schoolhouse Frank has spoken of several times," she said a little later, "and that barefoot girl he told about."

It was the first allusion to his interest in her that Blanch had made, and Alice colored.

"We will drive by where that girl lives tomorrow," responded Alice, "and, if you like, will call and see her. She is the most original little old woman in my school."

The next morning, when Frank and his sister were alone for a few moments, she said, "I am going to do you a good turn today, Sir Mahomet, and have a headache," and, laughing a little, "if you are wise you will improve your opportunities and persuade your 'Sweet Alice' to go after pond lilies and leave me here."

"I could not think of going after lilies," Alice replied when he proposed the trip, "and leaving your sister alone, and then it is almost too warm to be out in the sun this morning. If she feels better this afternoon we will go there when the sun gets part way down."

Blanch kept quiet all the morning and after dinner was the first to propose another trip to the lily pond. "I am in love with that old mill," she said, "and I want to see it when the sun gets down so it will be shady there."

When they reached the spot she at once developed an unusual interest in the mill and began an animated conversation with the miller regarding it and its history.

"You two go after lilies," she said when Frank had the boat ready, "and leave me here. I'm afraid the sun on the water will bring back my headache."

"All right, only your smiles will be wasted on the miller. He is too old to appreciate them. We won't be gone long," said Alice as she stepped into the boat. And now what spirit of mischief had come over her? She joked and jested on all manner of subjects—the boat, his rowing, Blanch's interest in the miller—and her blue eyes sparkled with roguish intent. She bared one round arm to the elbow and, pulling every bud and blossom she could reach, pelted her cavalier with them.

"Did you learn that stroke at college," she asked when one of his oars slipped, "or is that the way a yachtsman always rows?"

In response to all this he said but little, for he was thinking how best to say what was on his mind. He headed the boat for the shore, and as it came to a stop he said: "Let's get out and sit on the bank, Miss Page. I want to rest."

"Oh, we must not stop. It's almost sundown, and, besides, I want more lilies."

"Won't you get out, Miss Page?" he asked. "I've something I want to say to you and—and it's nice to sit in the shade and talk."

Without a word or even a look she arose and, taking his proffered hand, stepped out of the boat. Only a few steps up a mossy bank offered its temptation, and with quick gallantry he drew his coat off and spread it for her to sit upon.

"Tell me, Alice," he pleaded.

"It's nice and cool here," she said, "but we must not stay long. Blanch will be waiting."

Frank had thought many times of what he would say and how he would say it, but now that the critical moment had come his well chosen words vanished. He had remained standing and for a moment looked at Alice as she sat with hat hidden face, and then his heart-burst came.

"Miss Page," he said in a low voice, "you must know what I want to say, and—and I've come all the way from Maine to say it, and can you—is there any hope for me? Is there just a little?"

He paused, but no answer came, only her head sank a trifle lower, and now even the tip of her chin was invisible beneath the hat. It may be the movement emboldened him, for in an instant he was beside her on the ground and had one hand a prisoner.

"Tell me, Alice," he pleaded, "is there any chance for me? Say just one word—only one! Say 'yes'!"

The prisoned hand was at his lips now, and then she raised her face, and—oh, divine sight!—those blue eyes were filled with tears.

One instant flash of heaven only, and then a change came. She arose quickly and, turning away, said half petulantly: "Oh, please don't speak of that now and spoil our visit. Let us go back to the mill."

But still he held the little hand, and as she tried to draw it away he said pitifully: "Do you mean it, Alice? Is it no? Oh, don't let me go away without one word of hope!"

Then she raised her one free arm and, resting it against a nearby tree, pressed her face upon it and almost whispered: "Oh, don't ask me now! I can't say 'yes,' and I can't say 'no.'"

"I shall believe that your heart says 'yes,'" he responded quickly, slipping one arm around her waist, "and until you do say 'no' I shall keep on loving you just the same."

She drew herself away and, turning a piteous face toward him, exclaimed, "Don't, please, say another word now, or I shall hate myself as long as I live if you do."

For one moment he stood dumfounded, and then it dawned upon him. "Forgive me, sweet Alice, he said softly, "for speaking too soon. I believe I know why you feel as you do, and I shall go away hoping that in time you will come to know my mother better. And since you have said that you can't say 'no,' I shall anticipate that some time it will be 'yes.' Now we will go and gather lilies."

Then, as he led her to the boat, his arm once more stole around her waist, and this time she did not try to escape its pressure.

When, two days afterward, the brother and sister were ready to depart, Blanch put one arm caressingly around Alice and whispered, "Now, remember, you have promised to make me a visit next winter, and you must keep your promise."

And poor Romeo, standing by, had to look the love that was in his heart while he envied his sister her parting kiss.

CHAPTER XXIX.

WHEN Frank and his sister were away from Sandgate she said: "Well, my dear Ben Bolt, did you capture sweet Alice that afternoon? You must have made an effort, for she showed it plainly."

"No, I did not," he answered frankly, "but I made a break, and as she didn't take it amiss I feel hopeful. The fact is, sis, she is the most proud spirited girl I ever met, and mother is the ogre that stands in the way. If mother approves of Alice I am all right, but if she doesn't receive her with open arms it's all day with me."

"I could have told you that the day after we arrived there," answered Blanch, "and I am not surprised. Now"—with a laugh—"you must court mamma for a few months as well as your pretty Alice. It will do you good, for you never have been overdutiful."

Frank frowned. "Oh, bother these finicky mothers!" he exclaimed. "Why will they turn up their noses at every poor girl? If Alice had rich parents she would be all right, no matter if she were as homely as a hedge fence."

"Maybe that's so," answered Blanch, "but you can't change mamma, and if you want to win your Alice you must do as I tell you and court mamma. Now, I will tell you what to do, and if you're good to me I'll help you do it. In the first place you must stay in the mountains until we go home, and do all you can to please mother. Take her driving, ask her to play whist with you, and when she makes a good play praise it; carry her wraps for her, be solicitous about her welfare and comfort in all things, and treat her just as if she were Alice instead of mamma. Then when she is well cared for, act downcast at times and depressed. Wait a few days before working the melancholy act, and don't say much to other girls. Dance with Ede and me and say sweet things to mamma for a week. Then some day take her out for a drive and act as if you had lost your last friend. She will inevitably ask what ails you, but don't tell her too quickly. Let her coax you a little, and after awhile make a clean breast of it.

"I would suggest you insinuate the girl has favored your suit, but has practically said 'no' because she is too proud to marry into a rich family. That will do more to pique mamma's interest in the matter than volumes of praise for Alice. Don't say too much, but if she questions you about her answer frankly to the point, but convey the impression that you consider your case hopeless, and leave the rest to me."

Frank looked at his sister in silent admiration. "I didn't know you had such a wise head on your shoulders," he said at last.

When Frank and Blanch had made a short stop at Saratoga, "just to be able to say so," as Blanch said, they returned to the mountains, and the little domestic drama began. As it progressed Frank grew interested in watching the effect it had on his proud mother. To have her only son show her so much devotion before crowds of people gladdened her heart, and it was soon noticed and commented upon. She had known that Frank was from the first a little smitten with this sister of his college chum, but as he had had several mild cases before she thought nothing of it. With motherly caution she took care to ask no questions, even when Blanch told her they had visited Alice on their way to Saratoga. When the denouement came she was, as Blanch had predicted, completely taken aback. She made but little reply to his lovelorn tale except to laugh at him and assure him he would soon overcome it, but that night she questioned Blanch.

"I noticed Frank was very attentive to Miss Page," Blanch said, "while she seemed to avoid being left alone with him a moment. She is one of the sweetest and prettiest girls I've met in a long time, and also one of the proudest. I fell in love with her at sight and am sure Frank has, but so far as I saw she gave him no encouragement. She is poor, pretty and proud, and that tells the whole story. I imagined she believed she would not be welcomed by you."

When the last of August came and the Nasons returned to Boston, Frank and his mother were on excellent terms.

"What has come over Frank?" Edith said to Blanch one day. "He has never been so well behaved in his life. First he quit idling and began to study law as if he meant to be somebody, then he deserted his crowd of cronies for us and has acted as if we were his sole care in life ever since. What is the meaning of it, Blanch?"

"It seems so good to have him devoted to us that I am not going to ask any questions," answered Blanch.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods. All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other. During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far. Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. EMMA SHERIDAN.

A Clever Woman Who Writes Treaties For the State Department.

One of the clever women in the employ of the United States government is Mrs. Emma Sheridan. Mrs. Sheridan writes treaties for the department of state. It is quite remarkable work for a woman to do, but she is a born linguist and, as she herself says, spoke three languages from babyhood—English to her father, Italian to her mother and French to other people. Her mother was an Italian and her father half Italian and half English. She was born in Siena, Italy, and was educated in Paris. Her father, Don Antonio Montucci, spoke seven languages and was chiefly distinguished for having made the first Chinese dictionary (now preserved at the Vatican in Rome), carving with his own hands the wooden type, which consisted of 29,000 characters. Pope Leo XII. bought the characters and printed the dictionary in a limited number of copies, which he distributed to crowned heads with whom he had agreeable relations. Mrs. Sheridan is a widow. In her work at the department of state a knowledge of tongues is essential, inasmuch as treaties are commonly written in at least two languages and sometimes in three. As may well be imagined, tasks of this kind have to be performed with the utmost accuracy in order that each phrase in one language shall be exactly reproduced in the other.

MRS. EMMA SHERIDAN.

The Care of the Hair.

Keep the hair as clean as the rest of the body.

Let the air and sunshine have free access to it. Never wear a hat when you can go without it. It will retard the growth of your hair just as surely as covering up a plant would hinder its development.

Don't put a lot of strange nostrums on your hair. If you do you will get a lot of strange results.

Wash the hair in warm castile suds. Rinse it in cold water. The change of temperature stimulates growth. If you want to make your hair grow, this washing may be repeated every other day.

When you dry your hair, do it in the sunshine. Besides helping the growth of the hair it will produce beautiful tints and sheens that no artificial aids can bring.

Don't twist your hair in a towel to dry it. You will break many of the hairs that way. Dry it carefully by gentle pressure.

Don't change the direction of the roots of your hair often. If you wear it atop of your head in the daytime, when you arrange it for the night braid it there loosely after its thorough brushing.

Don't snarl your hair in combing it. The finer it is the more care you must take. One snarl will injure more hair than you can replace by the care and attention of weeks.

When you put your hair up, don't coil it tightly. It will grow better if the coil is loose and soft.

Never use a wire brush on the hair. Use a good, stiff bristle brush. That will bring a glow to the scalp.—Chicago News.

Table Lights.

A charming innovation in table lights, says a popular writer on home decoration, is the small cluster of flowers made of delicately tinted glass, a tiny electric light bulb being concealed in the center of the flower. The flower rests on a little pedestal in which the battery is concealed, a few leaves or ferns completely hiding it. The lights will burn several hours, and the batteries may be replaced at small cost. While not quite as soft as candlelight, the little electrics are very pretty and dainty.

Nothing will ever take the place of tall candlesticks in which shaded candles burn. The extent to which they are used, even at home dinners, is surprising. After all why should the pretty table be kept for company? The effect of a perfectly served meal on the table manners of the growing boy is salutary. Avoid paper shades, as a rule. There are several excellent flame proof shades to be had for very little, while the pierced silver and brass shades, though rather expensive, have such lasting qualities that it certainly pays to invest in them.

Brightly Burning Lamps.

Every housewife in whose home lamps are used realizes the annoyance that comes of less brilliant light than is given by the new burner. What is not generally understood is that the difficulty arises from dust which settles in the tiny apertures and prevents the free passage of air. If the burners are unscrewed from the lamps occasionally, freed of their wicks and boiled in a solution of washing soda and water they will come forth brilliantly clean and the light will be once more all that can be desired. Wicks, too, should be more often renewed than is commonly the case, as they are apt to absorb the oil less readily after prolonged usage. Often the simple plan for boiling the burner and fitting it with new wicks will mean all the difference between the discomfort of the dim, uncertain light and the gratification that comes of a clear and bright one.

A Form Board.

A form board is a necessity in the household where there are children whose clothing is constantly shrinking and getting out of shape. This board is made when the garments are new, or so nearly new that their original shape is not destroyed. A perfect pattern is cut of the little trousers, for instance, then this is taken to a carpenter, who cuts out a form board of quarter inch stuff which has been planed well on both sides. After the forms are carved out the edges are rounded and well smoothed with sandpaper, so that the garments will not be hard to put on. A hole is bored in the top of each form to hang it by when the garments are drying. Several articles can be dried on a form at one time.

Test Your Bedroom Air.

If you want to know if the air of your bedroom is pure, take an empty wide necked bottle capable of holding just nine and a half fluid ounces of water. Into this empty bottle pour half an ounce of limewater. Let the bottle remain uncovered in the room all night long. If in the morning the limewater is milky, the ventilation is very bad indeed. If the limewater becomes milky on your covering the bottle mouth with your hand and shaking the vessel the ventilation is not sufficiently good. If the limewater remains clear the air of the room is pure.

Mothers' Vocal Duties.

Mothers and those who have the education of children in their hands are chiefly responsible for our abuse of the English language and our elocutionary shortcomings. A mother should make it a special duty to correct every mistake in the sound of her child's voice and in its choice of words. And if voice production, the right pronunciation of words and distinct reading aloud were made part of a child's training we should soon become an intelligible and musically voiced people. Unchecked, we shall ultimately bark.—London World.

Garlic Flavoring.

A Frenchwoman famous for her delicious cooking uses garlic in many places where an American would employ onion. A single clover of garlic is halved and reduced to a watery pulp with a few scrapings on the cut side. No visible piece of the vegetable is allowed where it cannot be removed easily before eating. Before a roast goes to the oven a puncture is made in two or three places and a clove of garlic pushed in out of sight. These give an indefinable "faraway" flavor not easily traced.

The Gas Range.

To get the full benefit of the gas that must be consumed for heating an oven while roasting or baking is in progress canned or fresh vegetables might be placed upon the shelves for a whole or partial cooking. A few minutes upon the top of the stove will finish them. An appreciable diminution in the monthly gas bill will be noticed when this rule is observed carefully.

A Baking Hint.

An ingenious cook keeps cracker boxes 3 by 12 inches in size to bake loaf cakes in. Of course the quick baking cakes are not indicated, but when a cool or a slow oven is required the boxes run no risk of burning, and the paraffin paper with which they are lined prevents the cake from sticking. The size and shape are exactly right for slicing.

Ironing Ribbon.

In ironing ribbon, instead of placing the ribbon on the ironing board and passing the iron over and over the surface, the result will be more satisfactory if the ribbon is drawn from under the iron a few inches at a time, taking care that the edges are kept even, else the ribbon will present a crooked appearance.

Putting on the Corset.

Frenchwomen, though they are quite redundant, says an authority, have their redundance properly located. This is attributed to the fact that they know how to put on their corsets so that they support the figure below the waist instead of pressing the organs downward.

Use only hot water, with a little ammonia added, for cleaning paint. Ordinary kitchen soaps wear off the paint and do not clean it so quickly and thoroughly as ammonia.

Enameled ware that has become burned or discolored may be cleaned by rubbing with a paste formed by coarse salt and vinegar.

A little alum added to the stove polish helps to keep the stove bright and shining.

Varnished woodwork can be easily cleaned and brightened with crude oil.

NIGERIA PROTECTORATE.

Fulani and Haussa Are the Leading Tribes —Lady Lugard Throws Some Light Upon Their Customs.

In a description of the kingdoms of Nigeria Lady Lugard, wife of Sir Frederick Lugard, High Commissioner for Northern Nigeria, said that the reigning chiefs were of the semi-Arab race of the Foulahs, or Fulani, and what the Great Mogul of Delhi was to the India of Clive's day such was the Great Foulah of Sokoto to the Nigeria of four years ago, says The London Times.

The Fulani were a striking people, dark in complexion, but of the distinguished features, small hands and fine, rather aristocratic carriage of the Arabs on the Mediterranean coast. They were of the Mohammedan religion, and were held by those who knew them to be naturally endowed with the characteristics which fitted them for rule. Their theory of justice was good, though their practice was bad; their scheme of taxation was most elaborate and was carried even into a system of death duties, which left little for an English Chancellor of the Exchequer to improve. The caravan trade across the desert, which was already old when the Arab historian, El Bekri, wrote of the country a thousand years ago, and which then supplied the ports of southern Europe with the leather known to us as morocco leather, and with many other articles of luxury which English people of that day had not yet learned to use, continued and paid its tolls to the Fulani.

The Fulani had come to be the ruling people, but the Haussa, who were also for the most part Mohammedan, formed a very important industrial and commercial portion of the population. The cotton cloth of Kano was famous through the world of Africa long before the Fulani had made their appearance as a governing race in history. Iron smelting and smith's work were spoken of in an Arabic manuscript, not yet properly translated, which carried them back to the mythical ancestry of the founders of Kano. Weaving, dyeing, tanning, brass work, leather work were among the local industries, and trade in these as well as in the raw materials with which the country abounds is largely carried on by the Haussa people.

Speaking of the slave trade, Lady Lugard said that at the time of the transfer the principle currency of Nigeria was in slaves. Large sums were reckoned, not in pounds, but in slaves; public tribute was paid in slaves, and all labor was slave labor. The result of the slave trade was seen in depopulation. Where Barth described in 1854 a population of 50,000,000 there were probably not more to-day than 10,000,000 or 12,000,000. Yet so wedded were the Fulani rulers to the system that when, on the assumption of power by the British Government, the Emir of Bautchi was remonstrated with and asked to give pledges of abstaining from slave raiding for the future, his reply was: "Can you stop a cat from mousing? When I die I shall be found with a slave in my mouth."

MORRISON THE MAN FOR WEST HASTINGS

Renominated for the Legislature Yesterday Afternoon Amid Tremendous Enthusiasm.

Mr. Tom Ketcheson, of Sidney, is the New President of the West Hastings

Lib.-Con. Association — Bright Speeches Made—Notes of the Convention.

A meeting of the West Hastings Liberal-Conservative Association was held yesterday afternoon in the Oddfellows' hall, this city, and there is no exaggeration in saying that, in point of attendance and enthusiasm displayed, the expectations of the most sanguine were more than realized. The stalwarts were out in force, and the various speeches were listened to with eager interest, which augured well for rather warm times when the elections come on. There was hardly a vacant seat in the hall when the meeting was called to order, and among those present we noticed the following:

Sidney—T. Ketcheson, M. B. Mallory, Geo. Ostrom, C. H. Ketcheson, John Farrell, T. H. B. Purdy, D. Jones, J. Boyd, J. Vanalstine, J. Young, R. Armstrong, R. Bonisteel, F. Jeffrey, A. Ward, R. Purdy, S. Vandervoort, J. Hess, G. Weston, J. Vanmeer, F. Wallace.

Belleville—Sir Mackenzie Bowell, H. Corby, ex-M.P., E. G. Porter, M.P., J. W. Johnson, W. P. Hudson, W. Alford, Ald. Paterson, J. P. Thomas, F. M. Clarke, J. McCullough, Major Caswell, W. C. Reid, Wm. Reeves, A. N. Reid, N. B. Falkiner, H. Walker, J. Cummins, J. Barber, J. H. Starling, W. Tennent, J. Taylor, G. Denmark, W. McKeown, R. B. Cooper, S. E. Lennox, W. Fanning, G. Dulmage, C. Bogart, Rev. W. B. Heeney, D. J. Fairfield, J. Panter, A. R. Walker, Jos. D. Clarke, J. McKeown, W. P. McMahon, E. L. Palen, W. A. G. Hardy, Ald. Ketcheson, J. Wallace, J. Knox, R. S. Bell, A. E. Lewis, A. A. Roberts, J. McFee, Wm. Ketcheson, J. Taylor, R. Wedden, H. McCoy, J. W. London, Capt. N. Allen, W. C. Mikel, W. W. Pope, C. Lavis, jr., J. Downey, J. Anson-Cartwright, R. McCoy.

Trenton—W. Gibson, J. Glass, A. Flindall, W. Cronk, W. Keller, J. B. Murdoff, W. Miller, T. McRae, J. Empey, Dr. Macdonald, C. V. Cresby, J. McMaster, T. D. Onderdonk, T. H. German, J. Gothard, E. Wheatcroft, L. Young, G. W. Ostrom, ex-M.P.P., P. J. Peterson, E. Cooley, W. Meath, J. Crouter, H. Colburn, G. Reddick, P. J. O'Rourke, J. D. Macaulay, S. B. McClung, R. M. Foster, W. H. Matthews, T. Hogle, C. Crowe, W. Young, J. Falkiner, N. Miron, J. Gardner, G. Curry and 100 others.

Mr. B. M. Mallory, vice-president, of Sidney, was moved to the chair, in the unavoidable absence of the President, Mr. R. J. Graham.

The first business was the election of officers, which resulted thus:

President—Mr. Tom Ketcheson, of Sidney. Mr. Ketcheson took his place as chairman amid the very hearty applause of the audience.

Three vice-presidents from Belleville, Trenton and Sidney were then elected, as follows:

Belleville—Messrs. Walter Alford, John McKeown and Arthur Lewis.

Trenton—Messrs. Geo. Crowe, Wm. Farley and Wm. Matthews.

Sidney—Messrs. S. Vandervoort, B. M. Mallory and Hess.

Following is the personnel of the new executive: For Belleville—Messrs. Hugh Walker, Donald Patersen and L. B. Cooper. For Trenton — Messrs. P. J. O'Rourke, G. W. Ostrom and N. Miron, jr. For Sidney—Messrs. Clem. Ketcheson, Geo. Weston and Thos. Wallace.

The new secretary of the Association is Mr. Arch. Abbott, of Trenton, and ex-Ald. W. W. Pope was re-elected treasurer.

The next business was the nomination of a candidate, and seated on the platform at this time, were Messrs. H. Corby, ex-M.P., E. Guss Porter, M.P., M. B. Morrison, M.P.P., J. W. Pearce, M.P.P., W. J. Allen, ex-M.P.P., W. P. Hudson, ex-M.P.P., G. W. Ostrom, ex-M.P.P., and Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

The Candidate Nominated.

The President said the time had come to nominate a candidate, and he now called for nominations:

Mr. H. Corby proposed the name of M. B. Morrison, of Trenton, the present member.

Mr. Porter seconded the nomination, and for a minute or two the cheering made the windows rattle. The audience, one and all, were evidently very warmly disposed towards Mr. Morrison.

"Are there any other nominations?" said the chairman. There were not, and Mr. Morrison was declared the unanimous choice of the convention. Then the audience settled down to listen to the speeches.

Mr. Morrison, M.P.P.

The gentleman from Trenton expressed his gratitude for the unanimous nomination. He had expected Mr. Miscampbell, the organizer for Ontario, to be present, but that gentleman's wife was very ill, and a telegram received stated that he was unavoidably detained at home. Mr. Morrison spoke of the provincial elections of 1898 and 1902, and said that by their trickery in those two campaigns the members of the Ontario Government had proven themselves to be the sharpest and most unscrupulous scoundrels holding office in any British possession. (Cheers). They had debauched the judiciary, something which no man could contemplate with equanimity. Mr. Gamey had proved to the people of Ontario that his story was true, beyond peradventure. Ross had called the Legislature together to prevent the election trials. The "Soo" loan of two millions was Ross' latest iniquity, and he was forced to that to secure the attendance of two Grit members, who threatened to stay away from the House if the loan were not made. The loan was made, and the two members profited to the extent of $40,000. The Ross Government at that time was in a desperate position, and they had to give away the people's money to hold their power. The Rossites were, Mr. Morrison said, bound to be defeated when the next elections came. He knew his West Hastings friends would support him, and he would support Mr. Whitney, who would give this province what it so sadly needed — clean and honest government. (Cheers.) In conclusion Mr. Morrison congratulated Mr. Tom Ketcheson on his election to the office of President, and thanked all who had aided him in the past. Hearty cheers followed the popular M.P.P. to his seat.

J. W. Pearce, M.P.P.

The man from North Hastings spoke briefly. He quite agreed with what Mr. Morrison had said in condemnation of the Ross Government, which was surely the most rotten aggregation under the British flag. (Cheers.) He instanced the "Cap" Sullivan timber deal, in which the "Cap." had bought a limit for $250 and directly afterwards sold it for $9000. The Government had broken its promises in regard to the Gamey investigation and in many other matters. At present no man could look at the position in Ontario and not feel that a grave state of affairs existed. He urged them to leave no stone unturned to secure the election of Mr. Morrison, who would support Mr. Whitney, their honored leader, a man who was "honest enough to be bold and bold enough to be honest." (Cheers.)

W. J. Allan, ex-M.P.P.

Mr. Allan was pleased to see Mr. Morrison renominated. Any Riding in Ontario might be proud to have him as its representative. (Cheers.) He was proud and glad to stand face to face with so many of the stalwarts of good old West Hastings, who, he knew, would give a good account of themselves when the elections came on.

W. P. Hudson, ex-M.P.P.

Mr. Hudson said he could not find language strong enough to condemn the Ross Government. They were thieves and perjurers. (Cheers.) It was time for all honest men to unite and turn them out and he believed that out they would go next election. (Cheers.) Mr. Hudson urged the Conservatives to stand shoulder to shoulder, not only in West Hastings, but all through the Quinte district, and victory would surely come.

G. W. Ostrom, M.P.P.

Mr. Ostrom congratulated the convention on their choice of both officers and candidate. There was no doubt that he would be elected. He felt that it would be a waste of time to point out to them the sins of the Ross Government. All intelligent people knew them. He endorsed what had been said by Mr. Hudson about their standing shoulder to shoulder. If the Conservatives in East Hastings and Prince Edward had pulled together better at the last election the Conservatives would have had the majority in the Legislature. He urged them to unite and stand together against the Ross Government, which had become so rotten that it had nearly ruined the province.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

Sir Mackenzie, who was heartily cheered, said that brevity was the soul of wit; he admired the brevity of the speakers who had preceded him and would endeavor to imitate it. He congratulated Mr. Tom Ketcheson on his election to the office of President. He (Sir Mackenzie) had many old friends in North Hastings by the name of Ketcheson, and he distinctly recollected seeing the chairman's grandfather preside at a political meeting where the Grits and Radicals had the worst of a rather warm argument and had to run. (Cheers and laughter) He was glad to see Mr. Morrison renominated. He did not believe in changing members, for it took the best man some time to learn the run of parliamentary affairs, and there was no sense in changing him when he was just fit to be useful. Speaking of the political sins of the Liberals Sir Mackenzie said it was sad to see how the people winked at the moral obluquy of the Government. Speaking of the G.T.P. Bill, the speaker said the Conservatives in the Senate had tried to have it amended, but the Senate was now ruled by a Liberal majority, and the amendments were voted down. He congratulated the electors of West Hastings on their two candidates, Messrs. Morrison and Porter. They were men of ability and common sense. (Cheers). For his own part, he was still rather a young man, (laughter) but if he could, at the next election, do anything to help redeem East Hastings they could count on him. (Cheers) And if they made up their minds to redeem East Hastings it would simply be another application of the story of the Irishman who went to see Niagara Falls. His guide said, "Isn't it wonderful!" "What?" said Pat. "Why," said the guide, "that amount of water that's going over the falls." "Well," said Pat, "be jabers, what's to hinder it?" And so it was in East Hastings; if they made up their minds to redeem that Riding, there was nothing to hinder them, but they must work, and never give up till they had won. (Cheers).

Mr. P. J. O'Rourke.

The keen-looking gentleman from Trenton was heartily received. He thanked the men of Belleville and Sidney for renominating Mr. Morrison, who, he said, was a sure winner in anything he went into. (Cheers). Speaking of the political situation, Mr. O'Rourke said the people of Ontario had ceased to have responsible Government, for the Government of Ontario had ceased to care what they did, so long as they retained power. (Cheers). He was sure the Conservatives of West Hastings would reelect Mr. Morrison, and hoped they would do what they could to aid their comrades in Prince Edward and East Hastings. The Liberals of this province had for years acted as though they were chloroformed, and Conservatives must see that the wholesale robbery was stopped, and that the assets of the province, which were now being squandered, were conserved for their children and grandchildren. (Cheers).

Mr. H. Corby, ex-M.P.

Mr. Corby got his usual enthusiastic reception, and the cheering was so loud and long that it was some time before he could make himself heard, when he delivered a characteristically magnetic speech, which roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. No man in the local House to-day, he said, was more highly respected than Mr. Morrison. (Cheers.) And there was no man Mr. Whitney placed more confidence in. There was no danger of his defeat. If the Conservatives stood together the Grits might as well lie down. (Cheers and laughter.) Mr. Corby congratulated the new President on his election. When Tom Ketcheson, the fighter of Sidney, took off his coat something was going to drop. (Great cheering). Speaking of the political situation, Mr. Corby said it was not only the Conservatives who were down on Ross, but the better class of Liberals as well, who were disgusted with the rottenness of Ross and his Cabinet. Mr. Whitney was sure to be placed in power before long, and if he (Mr. Whitney) could not run the province better than Ross had done, he (Mr. Corby) would be one of the first to say "Turn him out." (Cheers.) Speaking of the present Grit extravagance, the speaker said it was time the province was run on business principles. (Cheers.) Talking of the "Soo" guarantee, Mr. Corby said he might as well go to the Government and demand money to help him in his business if he had allowed it to go to the dogs, as the people in the "Soo" had done. (Cheers.) Mr. Corby, in a characteristic way, poured hot shot into both the Ross and Laurier Governments, while the audience cheered enthusiastically. In conclusion he urged them to do their utmost to help elect Messrs. Morrison and Porter, and turn out the corrupt Liberal Governments.

Mr. E. Guss Porter, M.P.

The popular member for West Hastings was very warmly received, indeed. The political issues of the present day, he said, were well known, and it would be presumption on his part to attempt to present them to intelligent and reading men, such as composed the electorate of a banner Riding like West Hastings. He congratulated them on again nominating Mr. Morrison, who, like himself, had been raised in Consecon, and, though it was said that there the children were fed on fish and pancakes, he did not think that the results, in the persons of Mr. Morrison and himself, were bad stuff, after all. (Cheers and laughter.) All the cussedness of the Grit party, Mr. Porter said, was not centred in Toronto. A Grit was a Grit wherever you found him. (Laughter.) Bad as the Government at Toronto was, it was no worse than that at Ottawa. Every dog has his day, and he believed the dog days of the Laurier Government were nearly over. (Cheers and laughter.) Thinking men could see, in the signs of the times, the downfall of the Laurier Government. They had obtained power under false pretences, and had remained in power by conspiracy. (Cheers.) Mr. Porter instanced the things which, he thought, were making for the downfall of the Ottawa Government. There was the disaffection in their ranks — they were always fighting among themselves. Could a Cabinet like that do their duty towards the country. Tarte was kicked out of the Cabinet for advocating a policy of "Canada for the Canadians," and that was the policy of all who desired to see this country prosper, and also the policy of the Conservative party. (Cheers.) That great swindle, the G.T.P. Bill, was passed by the Government in spite of the Minister of Railways, who condemned the scheme and was kicked out of the Cabinet for it, though, as he said, it spelt ruin and disaster. Dundonald, a great soldier (tremendous cheering) was snubbed and ill-treated because he tried to do what was in the interests of Canada. But Lord Dundonald's record would live when the Laurier Government was buried in disgrace. (Wild cheering.) Then there was the case of the Auditor-General, the watchdog of the Treasury. He was a leading Liberal when appointed to office by the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, but had not been disturbed by the Conservatives when they attained power. Sir John Macdonald had told him to "sacrifice party interests, but don't sacrifice the interests of the people." But what did the Laurier Government do? They found they could not reach the Treasury while he was there, and then they tried to pass items over his head. Then Mr. MacDougall resigned because he felt that he could not maintain his honor and do what Laurier and his colleagues wanted him to do. And with the Auditor-General gone the hungry Grits would have free access to the treasury, and the prospect was not a pleasant one for the people who paid the taxes. The latest developments of the Treadgold concession affair were touched on, and Mr. Porter closed a masterly speech by asking how long the people of this country were going to suffer these things? Not long, he felt, judging by the signs of the times. And it would be a glorious day for this country when Canada received honest Government and the Grits were turned out. (Cheers.)

Mr. J. W. Johnson.

Mr. Johnson was warmly received and congratulated Mr. Morrison on receiving the nomination. In this life a man generally reaped what he sowed; that was what Mr. Morrison was doing. (Cheers). It was once supposed that Mr. Porter's next opponent would be Mr. O'Flynn, but instead it turned out to be Mr. O. Lott. (Laughter). Mr. O. Lott was the soda water fountain of this district, and had gas on tap to suit all people. The Mayor of Belleville and Mr. Lott were lately in Ottawa trying to get the Government to build the new drill shed for which the city had furnished the site some time ago. When he (Mr. Johnson) was Mayor of this city he had not found it necessary to be accompanied by a professional politician when he had business with the Government. That was what Mr. Lott was—a professional politician— and we in this country had no use for people of that class. Speaking of the case of the Auditor-General, Mr. Johnson said the Liberals evidently wanted to get rid of him so that all restrictions on the treasury would be removed. The speaker praised Messrs. Borden and Whitney, and said that up to a short time ago he had admired Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but his opinion had changed. The Premier had lately been guilty of equivocation, and he could not admire a man who was not truthful. Then Laurier was not a loyal man. He tried to keep the Canadian contingent from going to South Africa, but the sentiment of the country made him change his attitude. Then he had dared to call Lord Dundonald, a distinguished soldier (cheers) a foreigner. That word slipped out in a moment of heat, but it showed the true sentiments of the man. He (the speaker) believed that Laurier would have given a million dollars to be able to retract that word, but it was too late. These things were piling up against the Liberal Government, and the signs pointed to their downfall. In Canada we wanted common honesty and common sense, something we were not getting from the Government of the day. (Cheers). Before passing the G.T.P. Bill the Government should have consulted the electorate. It was a grave thing not to do so, but happily Mr. Borden has pledged himself to upset the arrangements if he attains power. Mr. Johnson closed a rousing speech by expressing his belief that when the elections came off the Conservatives would give a good account of themselves.

Mr. N. B. Falkiner.

Mr. Falkiner, in a witty speech, said Mr. Morrison was an ideal member, and he could be sure that the men of Belleville would stand by him.

Col. J. E. Halliwell.

Col. Halliwell, President of the lately organized Liberal-Conservative Association of West Hastings, who was in the audience, was called upon, and briefly said that, in the name of the men of the north, he wished the men of West Hastings godspeed, and hoped they would give Mr. Morrison a bigger majority than ever.

Resolutions of Confidence.

A resolution of confidence in Mr. Whitney was moved by Mr. E. G. Porter and Mr. Morrison moved a similar resolution in favor of Mr. Borden. Both resolutions were carried by a standing vote amid tremendous enthusiasm.

Cheers for Messrs. Morrison, Porter, the President and the King closed one of the most interesting and successful political meetings ever held in this district.

TRENTON MAN LOST A FOOT.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT AND BLOOD POISONING DEVELOPED.

An elderly man named James Campbell was last evening brought from Trenton here and taken to the hospital. A few days ago he had the misfortune to accidentally discharge a gun and the contents lodged in his right foot, making a dangerous wound. Blood poisoning developed and it was deemed necessary to have an operation performed in order to save his life. The foot has been amputated at the ankle, and he is reported to be doing as well as could be expected.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

CUTICURA SOAP

The World's Greatest Skin Soap.

The World's Sweetest Toilet Soap.

Sale Greater than the World's Product of Other Skin Soaps.

Sold Wherever Civilization Has Penetrated.

Millions of the world's best people use Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, the great skin cure, for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening and soothing red, rough and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings and chafings, for annoying irritations, or too free or offensive perspiration, for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery.

Cuticura Soap combines delicate emollient properties derived from Cuticura, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery. Thus it combines in one soap at one price the most effective skin and complexion soap, and the purest and sweetest toilet, bath and nursery soap.

IN THE HOPE OF A UNION

Mr. Fielding Would Encourage Trade With Newfoundland.

Steamship Subsidies the Subject Before the House on Thursday—Mr. Borden's Incisive Remarks on Government's Lack of Modesty and Comprehension of Canada's Needs—Why Their Fast Line Ocean Projects Failed.

Ottawa, July 8.—Steamship subsidies was the subject before the House yesterday. The debate turned on the point raised by the Opposition, that the country was not receiving fair returns for the subsidies voted to the steamship companies.

Mr. Smith of Wentworth made the point that the Dominion Government when giving subsidies to steamship companies should stipulate that freight rates should be as low as rates from American ports. Rates were low at present because there was not much freight offering. When plenty of freight was offered the rates invariably went up. Mr. Smith argued that the Government should put thermographs on each vessel to ensure that cold storage compartments were properly managed. Apparently there had been no attempt to control rates or to provide effective cold storage arrangements in the contract that had been let for two years.

Mr. Lennox of South Simcoe commented on the failure of the Peterson contract for a fast Atlantic line, and suggested that a second failure to obtain a fast service was now in sight.

R. L. Borden said the Government was now paying two-thirds as much as they intended to pay at first for a fast Atlantic service. They would obtain no more than what would constitute a third-class service from New York. With a little more modesty and a clearer comprehension the Government would not have made such a mess of things. Their policy had been to herald the proposed performances and then confess failure. The rate of passage from Canada to-day was the same as it was twenty-five or thirty years ago.

The correctness of the latter statement was admitted by Sir Richard Cartwright.

Mr. Cochrane of East Northumberland said it was humiliating for Canadians to be subsidizing a line to carry mail and at the same time pay an American company to look after the work.

Mr. Blain raised the point that there was nothing in the contract to prevent the company from discriminating against Canadian shippers. This Sir Richard Cartwright admitted.

E. F. Clarke declared that a provision along these lines should be asked in the contract. It was not fair, he said, that Canadians should have to make special arrangements and contribute a large subsidy to obtain the service that Americans who paid nothing towards it were enjoying at beter rates. Canadian shippers should be given precedence.

A long discussion followed, turning on the point that proper cold storage and ventilated chambers should be provided for carrying fruit and other perishable products.

An appropriation of $20,000 subsidy to a line of steamers between Halifax, St. John's, Nfld., and Liverpool was then considered. Mr. Fielding stated that at the present time, when there was a hope of union with Newfoundland it was desirable to do everything possible to encourage trade with the island.

This statement of policy the House cheerfully accepted.

Through His Estimates.

Mr. Emmerson practically got through his railway estimates last night, the last item passed being one of $140,000 for rental of the Grand Trunk terminal at Montreal. The House rose at 11.45 p.m.

Tariff Changes.

The Minister of Finance gives notice of additional tariff changes. On spirits, manufactured from sugar, syrup, molasses or other saccharine matter, a duty of $1.90 per gallon is imposed, the same as if the spirit is manufactured from not less that 90 per cent. of raw or unmalted grain. Crushed or ground malt hereafter is to pay a duty of 2½c per pound. The change takes effect to-day.

Standards For Oats.

Ottawa, July 8.—A. Campbell's special committee yesterday morning completed its labors, and reported the bill respecting inspection of grain with numerous amendments. The standards for Ontario and Quebec oats were fixed as follows: No. 1, 34 pounds; No. 2, 32 pounds; No. 3, 30 pounds; No. 4, 28 pounds, per bushel. A change was made in the manner of constituting the survey board for the eastern division, which will be appointed upon the recommendation of the Boards of Trade of Toronto and Montreal. The board was made the final arbiter in cases of dispute.

Late Mr. John J. Long's Funeral.

Collingwood, July 8.—The remains of the late John J. Long were brought home yesterday. A crowd of two hundred or more were gathered at the station when the train arrived at one o'clock, the casket being conveyed in a special car. During the day there were many sympathetic callers, and a large number of telegrams and several cablegrams of condolence were received. The funeral will take place this morning at nine o'clock, proceeding to St. Mary's Church.

Steel Hoop Plants Close.

Pittsburg, July 8.—Operations have been suspended at the four steel hoop plants of the Carnegie Steel Mills, two at Youngstown and one each at Girard and Warren. These are the only works of the big steel concern that has been under the wage scale of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. All the other plants of the company are operated on a strictly non-union basis.

SCHOLES WINS FINAL.

Lands the Diamond Sculls and Amateur Championship of the World.

Henley, July 8.—L. F. Scholes of the Toronto Rowing Club of Toronto, beat A. H. Cloutte of the London Rowing Club, in the final heat of the race for the Diamond Sculls. There was intense excitement along the bank of the river, mostly cheering for Cloutte, but all the encouragement did no good. Cloutte kept looking round continually for Scholes. Scholes was not pushed in any part of the course.

Cloutte had the best of the start, but at the top of the island Scholes took the lead, increasing it at one-quarter distance to two lengths. At half distance, which was reached in 4 minutes, Scholes was still two lengths ahead. At three-quarter distance Scholes went back to one-half length, but when the mile was passed was one and three-quarter lengths in front.

In front of the Leander enclosure Cloutte spurted and cut down Scholes' lead to a length and a half, but his spurt was no good. Scholes was still in the lead, and after passing the lower end of the Phyllis Court, Cloutte made another effort, but Scholes spurted too, getting home one length and one-quarter ahead in record time—8 minutes, 23 1-5 seconds.

Scholes was quite fresh after the finish and took a swim in the river. Cloutte was almost done out.

Winnipeg Was Beaten.

In the final for the Stewards' Cup, Third Trinity, Cambridge, beat the Winnipeg crew. Time, 7 minutes, 20 seconds. The Winnipegs steered badly in the early part of the race.

Flags Flew in Honor of Victory.

Toronto, July 8.—John F. Scholes numbered his visitors by the hundred. To the latter belonged Secretary Morley of the Board of Trade, who called at the Athlete Hotel to convey that body's felicitations on the result.

If anything further were needed to complete the worthy sire's pride and keen satisfaction the communication from Mayor Urquhart would supply the want. It was written and received yesterday and reads as follows:

"I have learned this morning, with a great deal of pleasure of the success of your son, Mr. Lou Scholes, in winning the Diamond Sculls at Henley, England. I have just cabled him my congratulations, and have ordered the flags to be hoisted at the masthead on all city buildings in honor of his victory. As his great achievement is, no doubt, to some extent, due to the deep interest taken in his work by his worthy father, I extend to you also my heartiest congratulations. Your son is an honor to Canada, and Toronto may well feel proud of him."

Challenges Durnan.

London, July 8.—(C.A.P.)—Edmund Fox of the Half Moon, Putney, has challenged Durnan to meet Barry for £200 aside in eight weeks from the signing of the articles.

CAVEN ON UNION.

Principal Regard It As Imperative Duty of the Church.

London, July 8.—Principal Caven, replying to the congratulations of the English and Welsh Free Church Councils, said the alliance represented the union of the Church of Christ. It embraced substantially the Presbyterianism of the world, and nearly all branches of the reformed church of Europe. He believed the Christian church ought to regard union as an imperative duty at the present time. He trusted that in the not far distant future it would be possible for them all to represent the principle of union, not only in the imperfect way of some federal constitution, but in a more practical organic incorporation. Any system of national education should be kept entirely free from sectarian bias, and there ought to be a conscience clause to protect parties unable to have the full advantage of the established system.

Government Raised Wages.

Ottawa, July 8.—Wages in the Printing Bureau were readjusted yesterday. Printers, who were receiving $13.50, will now get $14.50. Linotype operators will get $16.65, instead of $16.50. Pressmen will receive $16—an advance of $1.50 a week. The foreman of the composing-room will receive $25 a week—an advance of $3. The deputy foreman will receive $18 instead of $16.50. There was trouble in the bindery when it was found that no increases had been allowed the girls employed in the bureau. The superintendent was kept busy reasoning with the girls all afternoon, but no concessions were allowed.

Dundonald Incident.

Renfrew, July 8.—It has just emerged that Mr. Wright, M.P., attempted to injure the Dominion Day celebration here, at which Lord Dundonald was the honored guest. Mr. Wright made representations to Mr. Barclay Craig, one of the prominent Liberals of the county, and a leading member of the Dominion Day celebration committee, to withdraw the invitation to His Lordship. Mr. Craig replied that Lord Dundonald had been invited to be the guest of the Scotchmen of Renfrew County and that they deemed it an honor to entertain such a distinguished Scotchman and soldier.

Conservative Wins.

London, July 8.—A bye-election Wednesday at Chertsey, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of John A. Fyler (Conservative), resulted in the election of Lord Bingham (Conservative), who polled 5,425 votes against 4,876 for Mr. Sadler, the Liberal candidate. The campaign was fought almost wholly on the question of admitting Chinese labor into the Transvaal.

Changed His Plea.

Montreal, July 8.—S. T. Bent, secretary-treasurer and manager of the Shawinigan Carbide Company, appeared in court yesterday on a charge of appropriating $4,000 from his employers. He first pleaded guilty but on Judge Lafontaine saying that following the excitement of arrest he would not hold the prisoner to that admission, a plea of not guilty was registered.

London, July 8.—The alien immigration bill has been definitely abandoned for the present session of Parliament. The Opposition to the measure has been so persistent in the committee stage that the Government yesterday decided that it was impossible to pass the bill within the remaining few weeks of the session.

NO BREACH OF NEUTRALITY.

Britain's Action Taken at Request of Russia and Japan.

London, July 8.—In the House of Commons yesterday, Premier Balfour, replying to a question of Gibson Bowles (Conservative), said that the action of Great Britain in sending warships to the Kommander Islands for the protection of the seals was taken at the request of both Russia and Japan. No jurisdiction would be exercised over Japanese vessels, but the Japanese Government had requested that any raid should be reported to it, and the Government of Japan would deal therewith. There was no breach of neutrality in Great Britain's action, and no international question could arise therefrom. Mr. Balfour, in the course of his answer, reminded his questioner that the Pribiloff Islands did not belong to Russia, as stated in his question, but to the United States.

TROUBLE WITH MILITIA.

Question of Precedence and the Quality of the Rations at Sydney.

Sydney, N.S., July 8.—The principal trouble at Sydney now is among the militia. Evidently some one blundered so seriously that the attention of the militia has been called to the scandal.

A rumor was circulated here yesterday that there was trouble in the military camp. A detachment of the 94th Highlanders was seen marching through the city on the way to the barracks. They were ordered in by the colonel in command. Several other companies were ordered out and had reached Grand Narrows, but were ordered back on the arrival of the Halifax companies. They were given preferences over the Highlanders, which caused bad feeling. The Halifax men are kicking at the rations. They say they are worse than the Canadians received in South Africa.

War Minister Defeated.

Paris, July 8.—During the discussion in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday of a bill reducing the term of service of army reserve men, War Minister Andre was defeated twice in succession, which led to rumors of his possible retirement from office.

Sam Hughes' Ineffectual Effort For Orange Recognition.

Another Day Spent on the Estimates of the Minister of Railways And Canals—Minimum of Information Gleaned by Questions Directed to the Minister—Mr. Emmerson's Policy.

"The Future Must Take Care of Itself."

Ottawa, July 9.—Before the ordinary business was taken up in the House yesterday, Col. Sam Hughes said that next Tuesday would be the 12th of July, a day honored by many people. Many members of the House desired to be away, and he asked the Premier to make it a holiday for the House.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied with a smile that he had no doubt his hon. friend would have to divide his attention between his duties inside and outside. There was no precedent for such a course, so far as he knew.

"Oh, you can create a precedent," replied Col. Hughes, but the matter dropped.

Railways and Canals.

Another day spent on the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals and a minimum of information gleaned tells the story of yesterday's proceedings in the Commons. Previous to going into supply, the leader of the Opposition drew the Prime Minister's attention to the omission of a couple of important letters from the published correspondence between the Government and the Grand Trunk management in regard to the employment of aliens. Sir Wilfrid made a note of the matter, but did not commit himself to a promise that the missing letters would be produced.

Let Future Alone.

Mr. Gourley asked whether it was the policy of the Government to double-track the Intercolonial all the way from Halifax to Moncton.

"The future must take care of itself," replied Mr. Emmerson.

The Minister of Railways desired to take up the item of $500,000 for surveys and other expenses of the National Transcontinental Railway, but the Conservatives objected.

Mr. Clark and Mr. Lennox pointed out that a great deal of information should be given to the House with reference to this matter and also that the evidence taken by Judge Winchester regarding the employment of aliens should be printed for distribution.

Mr. Emmerson was not prepared to go into the subject fully, and the discussion of it was accordingly postponed.

The discussion of the Davis contract for lighting the Cornwall Canal was fixed for next Wednesday.

Expense of Canals.

Dr. Reid of Grenville, criticized the expense incurred in looking after the canals. They were used, he said, largely as a means of giving fat berths to Liberals, who were thus well paid for doing practically nothing. The case of the collector of customs at Cardinal, Ont., was a flagrant instance of this sort of thing. He had nothing to do and did not collect a dollar of duties in a whole year while his stipend was $1,000, together with an allowance of $1 a day for driving from the village to the canal locks. For extra work on Sunday he got 25 cents an hour, although the canal was closed from midnight Saturday to midnight on Sunday. Besides all this he was paid office rent, although he used his own house as an office and received an allowance for fuel.

Mr. Emmerson did not attempt to deny that the facts are as set forth. He contented himself with the observation that there are now more looks than there used to be, a remark that had no relation to the point raised by Dr. Reid.

No Facts re Canals.

The discussion continued for some time, but it developed little beyond the obvious fact that Mr. Emmerson had no knowledge of matters relating to the canals. The work at the Galops Rapids thus far had cost $1,400,000, and it is estimated that another $200,000 will be required.

Mr. Haggart repeated the statement which he has made many times, that as Minister he refused to sanction this work. He knew then, as he knows now, that an equally good channel could have been procured for $100,000.

Mr. Emmerson substantially admitted this, but urged that the channel of which Mr. Haggart spoke would be partly in United States waters.

Dr. Reid closed the case with the remark that vessels have to go into United States waters as things are.

The House sat until midnight. The items carried during the day included those for strengthening the bridges on the Intercolonial Railway; for the Galops Canal, the removing of obstructions and of improving the Welland Canal, and for deepening the summit level between Port Colborne and Thorold.

Eight Days on Open Sea.

Glasgow, Scotland, July 9.—Another boat with Norge survivors, eleven passengers, eight sailors and one child, has reached the Shetland Islands. This boat, which was in charge of the second mate of the Norge, was eight days on the open sea. The party rowed the entire distance to the islands. All on board were exhausted and unable to stand when they landed. The Shetland Islands were sighted by the boat on Wednesday last.

Marie Joussaye Gets Three Months.

Toronto, July 9.—The Attorney-General's department has been notified that Marie Joussaye of Toronto, who was some time ago arrested in Dawson City on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

FOUNDATION OF EMPIRE.

Bring Colonies to British Councils, Says Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain—Mix Organization With Sentiment.

London, July 9.—(C.A.P.)—Mr. Chamberlian was the guest of 200 Unionist members of Parliament and 17 others at the Hotel Cecil last night.

Mr. Chamberlain, who was frantically cheered, said he was a fiscal reformer because he was an Imperialist. On that reform depended the maintenance of the British Empire. His belief in free trade was shaken two years before when at the colonial office he learned how closely the question affected the Empire. No other nation had to grapple with such an infinite variety of problems. The colonial administration of the early years of this country would determine the future of the British Empire.

Colonies Alive to the Situation.

The colonies were alive to the situation. They never want a suitor pay them court. He would urge upon the colonies as well as upon the motherland the absolute necessity of taking the present creative time to lay the foundations of the Empire. The colonies must be brought to our councils. Sentiment without organization was nothing better than courage without discipline.

The present position of the Empire was the same as that of the United States immediately after the declaration of independence, when it became necessary to bind together the different colonies separated from England. The step was achieved slowly in the face of great opposition. There was nothing sordid in commercial union as declared by the leader of the Opposition. It was more sordid to let individuals shift for themselves.

When the time arrived the Unionist party would pull together.

On His Birthday.

Joseph Chamberlain yesterday, on the anniversary of his birth, was the guest of 200 members of the House of Commons in sympathy with his fiscal policy. In the course of a long speech, Mr. Chamberlain said he had not wavered in his conviction that the policy he advocated was necessary in order to prevent the loss of British trade and prestige. He said that the British people should follow the example of the United States and make a united Empire out of scatterd sister states.

France Is Alarmed.

London, July 9.—(C. A. P.)—The French Government is said to be much concerned over the serious proportions attained by the emigration of Breton peasants to Canada. An effort will be made to divert the tide to Africa.

Successful.

Daily Intelligencer.

THE MAJOR-GENERAL AND THE AUDITOR-GENERAL.

When caught in a fault it is a very objectionable practise to call the other fellows names. That is what the members of the Laurier Cabinet are doing. In his speech opposing the Conservative resolution for a committee to report on the changes in the Audit Act recommended by the Auditor-General, Sir Wilfrid Laurier suggested a comparison between Mr. McDougall and the Czar of Russia. Just as in the case of Lord Dundonald, the Government professed to see a danger to the constitution from the professional head of the militia, so in Mr. McDougall's case it is represented that the choice is between the Russian and the British principles of Government.

That not the slightest danger to the constitution has existed in either case, it is hardly necessary to observe. As the Winnipeg Telegram points out, it is not according either to the spirit or the letter of our constitution that the members of the Cabinet of the day should for partizan or corrupt purposes interfere with the duties assigned by Acts of Parliament to the G. O. C. or the Auditor-General. If by formal legislation we decide to engage a British military expert and assign him certain duties and lay down an order of procedure, we run no risk whatever and our anatomy is not a whit constricted so long as that expert remains within the sphere allotted him. It was the Cabinet which violated the constitution by unjustifiable interference with what was established by Parliament, the master of the Cabinet.

If by legislation we appoint an Auditor-General with the powers necessary for an independent audit, we but exercise our rights of autonomy in so doing. An independent auditor, within the intention of the act, is no danger to our self-government. Under the present Government Mr. McDougall went about the performance of his duties just as he had done for a score of years. But he found that the Government was bent on hampering him and nullifying his usefulness by interpreting the statute in a different way from what it had ever been interpreted before. He requested that Parliament should declare its intention with regard to that statute to be the intention which had always before been accepted and to make the wording clear beyond further question. We fail to see peril to our institutions in this. On the other hand, the peril arises from the Cabinet which encroaches for unworthy purposes upon the limits set to its interference.

Since within a few weeks the two most valuable civil servants have been charged with conspiracy against the constitution, the public have a better chance rightly to estimate the charge than would have been the case if only a single instance had arisen. And there can be no doubt that the public will be convinced that the only danger to our institutions has arisen from a partizan and corrupt Cabinet, which sought illegitimate power to carry out objectionable schemes.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

Little things show what a man is. The Ottawa Citizen gives the following illustration of Lord Dundonald's regard and desire for the volunteer force of Canada:

"Some months ago Lord Dundonald complimented a bandmaster on the excellent music from the regimental band. The bandmaster replied that it could be much improved by the addition of a certain expensive musical instrument which the officers had not been able to complete the purchase of. Lord Dundonald gladdened the man's heart by directing him to buy the instrument at once and let him know how much of the purchase money was short. This was done, Lord Dundonald giving his cheque for the deficiency."

Contrast this with Fisher's loaning a horse to a trooper and then taking all the Government's allowance for the horse, and the man's pay also for its use. Meanness personified.

The running the Intercolonial for the ten months ending the 30th of April, cost the country $540,000, more than was earned. In addition to this sum $2,277,298 has been spent on what are called betterments, showing an actual expenditure of $2,817,298 on the Intercolonial Railway during the past two months, $540,000, of which is a dead loss. It is well there is a surplus revenue to meet the extravagant management of this political road. Gritism means extravagance.

The Globe assumes surprise at the Mail and Empire's declaration "that there can be no doubt that it was the decided intention to keep Judge Britton's report from Parliament," because Mr. Scott declared he gave the order not to report without the knowledge of the Cabinet. A citizen complains that bands and orchestras in this city when they play the National Anthem, at the conclusion of an entertainment, generally hurry through the first strain and let it go at that. He thinks it should be played all through in a proper way, and most people will think he is right. If bands and orchestras don't want to play our national air properly and completely, let them leave it alone.

Mr. W. P. Hudson thinks that our reporter made a slight mistake in reporting his speech at the West Hastings Conservative Convention. Mr. Hudson was reported as saying that the Ross Government "were thieves and perjurers." But that request of the City Treasurer, that the city pay for his guarantee bonds, was cool enough, in all conscience. Other city officials pay for their own bonds, why should not he? Especially as, we understand, the by-law appointing him stipulates that he shall do so. Leaving that fact aside, however, the precedent would be a bad one. Mr. Price gets his salary regularly. If he will not meet the obligations in connection with his office, let him make way for someone who will.

OUT OF ORDER

The great evils which are often wrought by small ills can be no more clearly and effectively demonstrated than by the troubles of an automobile driver. How well he knows the disastrous effect of negligence or failure to give proper care to each and every detail. A single small part out of order affects the entire mechanism.

And so it is with the infinitely more delicate and intricate mechanism of the human frame. Affected kidneys put the entire system out of order. They are the direct cause of lame back, sick headache, sallow or deathly pale complexion loss of memory, loss of ambition, dyspepsia, melancholy, tired feeling, swollen joints, puffed face, rheumatism in any of its various forms, loss of appetite, and many more troubles. Have you any of these symptoms?

Bu-Ju, The Kidney Pill, will set you right. It will cure you. Begin today.

Uncle Terry

....By....

CHARLES CLARK MUNN

Copyright, 1900, by LEE & SHEPARD

shoppers were crowding the streets, and the hustling, bustling life of a great city was at flood tide. Albert Page, full of business, was in his office, and Frank Nason was studying hard again. Small fortunes were being won and lost on State street, and in one smoke polluted broker's office Nicholas Frye sat watching the price of wheat. The September option opened that day at 78¼, rose to 79, fell to 76⅞, rose to 78 and then dropped back to 76. He had margined his holdings to 71, and if it [illegible] that price his $60,000 would be gone and he —ruined. For many nights he had had but little sleep, and that made hideous by dreams filled with the unceasing whir and click, click, click of the ticker. He was worn and weary with the long nervous strain and misery of seeing his fortune slowly clipped away by the clicker's tick that had come to sound like the teeth of so many little devils snapping at him. To let his holdings go he could not, and, lured on and on by the broker's daily uttered assertion that "wheat could not go much lower, but must have a rally soon," he had kept putting up margins. Now all he could possibly raise was in the broker's hands, and when that was gone all was lost.

Frye sat and watched the blackboard where the uneven columns of quotations looked like so many little legs ever growing longer. Around him were a score of other men watching the figures. No one cared whether another won or lost in the great gambling game that ruins thousands.

It was the caldron filled with lies, false reports, fictitious sales and the hope and lust of gain that boiled and bubbled, heated by the fires of hell. And ever around that caldron the souls of men were circling, cursing their losses and gloating over their gains.

And Frye was muttering curses.

So fast came the quotations that the boy could no longer record them. Instead he called them out in a drawling singsong:

"September wheat now seventy-three—the half—five-eighths—a half—five-eighths split—now a half—three-eighths—a quarter—seventy-three!" Frye set his feet hard together and clinched his hands. Only 2 cents in price stood between him and the loss of all his twenty years' saving. All the lies he had told for miserable gain, all the miserly self denial he had practiced, all the clients he had cheated and robbed, all the hatred he had won from others, availed him not. His contemptible soul and his life almost now hung by a miserly 2 cents.

"Seventy-three—a quarter—an eighth—seventy-three—now seventy-two seven-eighths—three-quarters—five-eighths—three-quarters split—now five-eighths—a half—a half!"

Pandemonium was raging in the Chicago wheat pit, and the ticker's teeth clicked like mad.

"Seventy-two—a half—a half—three-eighths—a half—three-eighths—a quarter—seventy-two!"

Cold beads of sweat gathered on Frye's forehead. One cent more and he was ruined.

"September wheat now seventy-one seven-eighths—seven-eighths—three-quarters—seven-eighths split—now the three-quarter—five-eighths—a half—a half—five-eighths—a half—a half again—three-eighths—a quarter—an eighth—a quarter—an eighth—a quarter—an eighth—an eighth—a quarter split—an eighth—

"Seventy-one!"

Frye was ruined.

He gave one low moan, the first and only one during those three long weeks of agony.

The devil's teeth kept snapping; the endless coils of tape kept unwinding. The boy continued his drawl, but Frye paid no heed. Only those spider legs on the wall seemed kicking at him, and that fatal seventy-one—one—one—kept ringing in his ears. He arose and staggered out and with bowed head made his way to the office.

Click, click, click!

Seventy-one—one—one! It was the last he heard, and then he sank forward on his desk in a stupor.

At this moment Uncle Terry, with Frye's letter in his pocket and righteous wrath in his heart, was speeding toward Boston as fast as steam could carry him.

The clear, incisive strokes of an adjacent clock proclaiming midnight awoke Frye. He raised his head, arose, lit the two gas jets and sat down.

Seventy-one—one—one!

They brought it all back to him, and now, alone in his misery, he groaned aloud, and with his despair came the dread of the morrow, when he must go forth crushed, broken, despairing, penniless.

All would know it, and all would rejoice. Out of the many that hated or feared him not one would feel a grain of pity, and he knew it.

Then his past life came back to him. He had never married, and since he had looked down upon his dead mother's face no woman's hand had sought his with tenderness. All his long life of grasping greed had been spent in money getting and money saving. No sense of right or justice had ever restrained him. Year after year he had added to his hoard, carefully invested it, and now it had all been swept away!

He took a pen and wrote a brief letter. Then he went to his tall safe, opened both doors and, taking a small, flat packet from an inner till, returned to his desk, placed that and the letter in one long envelope and sealed and directed it.

Once more his head sank forward on the desk, and he groaned aloud. For a long time he remained thus, living over the past three weeks of agony, and then there smote upon his tortured nerves the sound of many clocks striking 1. It sounded as if they were mocking him, and from far and near, some harsh and sharp, some faint in the distance, came that fatal, one, one, one! He arose and, going to a small locker in his room, grasped a half filled bottle of liquor and drank deeply.

He arose again and, taking a letter opener, crowded bits of paper into the keyhole of the door and up and down the crack. Then he closed the one window, turned out the two gas jets and opened the stopcocks again. An odor of gas soon pervaded the room, into which came only a faint light from the statehouse dome.

CHAPTER XXXI.

ALBERT PAGE had just finished reading his morning mail the first day of September when his office door opened and Uncle Terry entered.

"Well, well!" exclaimed Albert, springing to his feet. "How are you, Uncle Terry? How are your good wife and Telly, and when did you arrive, and why didn't you let me know so I could meet you?"

"Waal," answered Uncle Terry, seating himself, "I got in purty late last night an' put up at a tavern near the depot."

"But why didn't you write or wire me, so I could have met you at the train?"

TIMELY TOPICS.

A certain Capt. Chartrand, of the Royal Military College, Kingston, is, it would appear, trying to obtain notoriety by writing letters to The Whig in support of Russia in the present war. That is all right; he has a right to his opinions, like the rest of us. But we see it alleged in the press that Capt. Chartrand also declares that Great Britain surely instigated the present war. He is quoted as follows: "England wants politically a good blow to Russia, and she is rubbing her hands to see the way the little Japanese are doing her work." Is that not queer language for a servant of the Crown? Capt. Chartrand should be given his marching orders. As a private citizen he can write what he pleases, and if any newspaper is foolish enough to print it, all well and good, but a paid official of a Government military institution should know that "discretion is the better part of valor." However, we should judge by his name that Capt. Chartrand is not a "foreigner." Perhaps he can say what he pleases without displeasing Sir Wilfrid.

MY AIN FIRESIDE.

O, I hae seen great anes and sat in great ha's,
'Mang lords and 'mang ladies a' cover'd wi' braws;
But a sight sae delightful I trow I ne'er spied
As the bonnie blythe blink o' my ain fireside,
My ain fireside, my ain fireside,
O, sweet is the blink o' my ain fireside.

Ance mair, heaven be praised! round my ain heartsome ingle,
Wi' the frien's o' my youth I cordially mingle;
Nae forms to compel me to seem wae or glad,
I may laugh when I'm merry and sigh when I'm sad.
My ain fireside, my ain fireside,
O' sweet is the blink o' my ain fireside.

Nae falsehood to dread, nae malice to fear,
But truth to delight me, and friendship to cheer;
O' a' roads to happiness ever were tried,
There's nane half so sure as ane's ain fireside.
My ain fireside, my ain fireside,
O' sweet is the blink o' my ain fireside.

"THE VILLAGE BURGLAR."

Verses Found on a Prisoner Arrested in London, England.

William Foster, a well-dressed youth, who declined to give any account of himself, was charged at Bow street police court with burglary, says Lloyd's Weekly News. A Commissionaire found him underneath a table in the dining-room of a flat at 14 Buckingham street, Strand. He said he had seen one of the windows open, and had entered it from the garden at the back of the flat. He was out of work, and thought he would see what he could get. The Commissionaire aroused Professor Huntingdon, of King's College, who occupied the flat, and the prisoner was given into custody. A remand for inquiries was ordered.

When searched the prisoner was found to be in possession of a glazier's diamond and the following lines, entitled "The Village Burglar," written on a scrap of paper in pencil:

Under the spreading gooseberry bush
The village burglar lies;
The burglar is a crafty man,
With whiskers on his eyes;
And the muscles of his brawny arms
Keep off the little flies.

He goes on Sunday to the church
To hear the parson shout;
He puts a shilling in the bag
And takes a sovereign out;
And when he reaches home again
He smiles without a doubt.

And going home one winter's night
He sees an open door—
An overcoat hangs in the hall,
And he creeps along the floor.
A moment later out he comes,
And then the deed is o'er.

He proudly gazes on his prize,
And holds it out a stretch;
He hurries down the lighted street,
And ah! the crafty wretch—
He takes it to the pawnshop
To see what it will fetch.

Howe'er, a policeman passing 'long,
With measured beat and slow,
Has seen the burglar's little game,
And quietly lets him know:
And he takes him to the prison cell
When the evening sun is low.

Boozing, borrowing, burglaring
Have told an awful tale,
And now at leisure he repents,
With many a mournful wail.
Something attempted, something done,
Has earned six months in jail.

Grand Advice.

A shoemaker came to the minister asking his advice because "that sweep, his landlord, had given him notice to quit and he would have nowhere to lay his head." The minister could only advise him to lay his case before the Lord. A week later the minister returned and found the shoemaker busy and merry. "That was gran' advice ye gied me, minister," said the man. "I laid my case before the Lord, as ye tell't me, an' noo the sweep's deid."—Geikie's "Scotch Reminiscences."

Good Humor.

According to ancient theory, there are four principal humors in the body —blood, phlegm, choler and melancholy. The predominance of any one determined the temper; hence the expression "choleric humor," etc. A nice balance made a good compound called a good humor, and a preponderance of any bad compound called an ill or bad humor.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very billious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I know of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Billious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

SHIELDS IS MANAGER.

Certain Announcements That Have Gladdened the Hearts of the Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, July 9.—Cornelius Shields named as manager for the Lake Superior Company and the steel plant to be started at once are announcements which gladdened the hearts of Sooites yesterday.

The directors, who arrived here last Sunday and have spent their time up to Wednesday night looking over the properties, have been holding business meetings Thursday and yesterday.

The appointment of Mr. Shields was decided upon yesterday and confirmed last evening. He will take charge at once and will have instructions to operate practically all the plants; but definite plans as regards that have not yet been announced by the directors, although one stated yesterday morning that the steel plant, which is by far the most important of all, will be put in operation as soon as men and material can be procured, which ought not to be very long.

The sulphide and the ground wood pulp mills, the Algoma iron works, the Helen mine, the charcoal plant and the sawmill are among those to be operated.

President Warren and the directors leave for the east this noon.

OVATION FOR PARKER.

Revelation of the Passion of Politics—Gold Plank Beaten.

St. Louis, Mo., July 9.—All that had happened in the convention up to the time Mr. Littleton concluded his address multiplied many times was almost as nothing compared to the hurricane that broke out when he mentioned the name of Alton B. Parker. On the part of the Parker delegates it was a revelation in the passion of politics. Like one man they sprang up in their chairs, with everything that could be waved tossed high in the air. The delegates tore their State emblems from the poles, and carrying them high overhead tramped around the hall again and again, cheering frenziedly.

When Bryan Scored.

The feature of the early hours of the day was the knocking out by the committee on resolutions of the gold plank which had been put in the platform. W. J. Bryan not only scored in the fight on the money plank, but secured a modification of the tariff plank. The platform is a compromise acceptable to all of the interests involved, and was adopted unanimously by the committee.

During the day these gentlemen were placed in nomination: Judge Parker, Judge Gray, W. R. Hearst and Gen. Nelson A. Miles.

Anglo-French Agreement.

London, July 9.—Lord Lansdowne is stated to have impressed the French Government with the fact that he cannot tie the hands of the Newfoundland Government, though he recognized the legitimacy of their desire that the treaty be applied in a spirit agreeable to Paris and London. The Paris correspondent of The Times is sure there is no serious hitch in the Anglo-French negotiations.

RECEPTION TO DR CROTHERS.

WARMLY WELCOMED BY HIS PETERBORO PARISHONERS ON THURSDAY EVENING.

Peterboro Review: A large number of the congregation of George St. Church gathered in the basement of the church last night to welcome their new pastor, Rev. Dr. Crothers. After spending a social hour, Mr. B. Shortly took the chair, and called the gathering to order. On the platform with him were Rev. Mr. Jolliffe, of Charlotte Street, Rev. Dr. Crothers and Mr. D. W. Dumble. Solos were sung by Miss Kendry, Mrs. McGregor, Mr. R. N. Jolliffe, Miss Clara Belleghem, and by request Mrs. McGregor favored them with another solo.

Mr. Dumble, on behalf of the people and of the official board of the church, gave an address of welcome to Dr. Crothers. He said that while only a few days ago they had regretted losing Mr. Wilson, it gave him pleasure to extend a welcome to their new pastor. He thought the itinerary system of the church a good one, as it gave the congregations a change, and gave them a chance to hear the good men and meet with them. The invitation to Dr. Crothers had been an unanimous one. They had endeavored to get the best one and had deliberated much over this, and had received the most favorable reports. He said the congregation were prepared to stand by the pastor, and if anything ever happened to mar their happiness, it would be the pastor's fault and not the people's. He asked the pastor to make the most of their good qualities and overlook their faults. He said the minister was not the church, but only the head of the flock, and the people must work together. He hoped the same peaceful relations would exist as he had the pleasure of witnessing for the past forty years, and hoped that the pastor's life would be an inspiration to them.

Rev. Dr. Crothers, in reply, spoke of the pleasure it gave him to meet them last evening, and to become acquainted with them. He referred to the men on the platform, and spoke of having met them at different times. He hoped the most pleasing relations would exist between them, and said that his impression of the town had been most favorable. He asked the people to co-operate with him in his work and help in the welfare of the church. He referred to Mr. Dumble's allusion to any disagreement that might arise, and said that it would certainly not be his fault. He had been received most kindly by the people here, and was sure that his term here would be very pleasant.

Refreshments were served by the ladies, and a social time was spent, after which the gathering dispersed.

WELCOMED THEIR NEW PASTOR.

INTERESTING AND PROFITABLE FUNCTION IN BRIDGE ST. SUNDAY SCHOOL ROOMS LAST EVENING.

Never did Bridge St. Methodist Church Sunday School rooms look as beautiful as last night. A large committee had spent nearly two days in decorating them with flags, banners, flowers and bunting of all colors, and it was, indeed, an enchanting sight and subject of universal praise. However, as more than one of the speakers said, it was none too good for a pastor and his wife and family who came from all other churches where they had been with the recommendation of being more loved than any who had preceded them. Large committees of "welcome" and "introduction" received the guests and performed their pleasant duties in a most genial manner. The object of all these outward and visible signs was to prove to the new pastor of Bridge St. Church and his family—the Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A.—how delighted the congregation of Belleville's historic church was to welcome him to our city, and their gratitude that their unanimous choice had been approved of by the governing bodies of the Bay of Quinte conference, with like unanimity.

After a happy hour and a half of hand shaking, etc., Sir Mackenzie Bowell was requested to take the chair. The Rev. Professor Doxsee led in prayers and the various organizations of the church, through the chosen representatives, welcomed the pastor and his family. Mr. Wm. Johnson represented the Quarterly Official Board; Mr. W. R. Aylsworth the Trustee Board; Mr. F. E. O'Flynn the Sunday School; Mrs. (Mayor) Chown, the Woman's Missionary Society; Mr. J. T. Luton the Epworth Leagues; Mrs. F. E. O'Flynn the Ladies' Aid; Mrs. J. C. Lake the King's Daughters; Professor Hunt the choir, and Mr. J. W. Johnson the congregation.

Mr. Wilson's reply was, like the words of welcome, brief, but evidently sincere, and heartfelt was the Rev. Mr. Wilson's reply to the voice of the church.

An all too short programme of music and a reading was next given, those who took part being proof of its excellence:

Vocal Quartette—Miss M. Vermilyea, Miss Gertrude Price, Mr. C. H. Vermilyea, Mr. J. T. Burns.

Vocal Solo—Miss Elsie Price.

Violin Solo—Miss Sydna Browne.

Vocal Solo—Mr. D. A. Cameron.

Recitation—Miss Lucy Berry.

Vocal Solo—Miss Mabel Vermilyea, with violin obligato, by Miss Sydna Browne.

Special pleasure was freely expressed at the reappearance of Miss Browne, after a year's absence.

The Hon. Senator Perley, of the Northwest, added no little to the delights of the evening by an appropriate five minute address, and the programme was made still more complete by what the Rev. J. A. Wilson, M.A., pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Peterboro, said about his namesake, the Rev. J. P. Wilson.

Miss Myrtle Wiggins is spending her vacation in this city.

Miss Edith Fenn left yesterday to visit friends in Toronto.

Mrs. M. Sine and daughter, Miss Vera, are visiting friends in the country.

Mr. Hy. Pretty is able to be out again, after being confined to the house for some time.

Mr. James Fleming, of Huntingdon, a member of the County Council, was in the city.

Little Miss Grace Panter, daughter of Ald. Panter, yesterday afternoon gave a party to some of her young friends. The festivities occurred on the beautiful lawn of Mr. John Panter, Murney St., from 4.30 to 8.30 p.m., the Misses Ada and Eva Panter, aunts of the small hostess, looking after the welfare of the youthful guests.

Mr. John Martin, of Dundas St., is having a family reunion these days. Yesterday his daughter, son-in-law and grandson, from Winnipeg, arrived—Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Day—and this afternoon Mr. John C. Martin will come from Ottawa.

The Misses L. and J. Falle left this morning for Collingwood, where they will take the S.S. Germanic for Blind River to visit their sister, Mrs. E. G. Kerr. They will also visit the Soo before returning.

A FAMILY NECESSITY

Is a remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back—use Nerviline: it's more penetrating, pain subduing and powerful than any other liniment, Nerviline is at least five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be over-estimated. For man or beast Nerviline is a panacea for all pain and costs only 25c per bottle. Buy Nerviline to-day.

SOLDIER BOYS RETURN.

BROWN AND BRONZED, AND LOOKING VERY "FIT," THE 49th CAME BACK FROM CAMP THIS MORNING.

The work at Barriefield camp has made a wonderful improvement in the bearing of the men of the 49th, which Regiment this morning returned from Kingston. Arriving about 10.30, the Regiment detrained at the station and marched down Front St. The Bugle Band played a lively quickstep, and the men stepped out in brick soldierly fashion, being heartily cheered at several points along the route. In a carriage at the head of the parade were seated Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Honorary Colonel of the 49th; E. Guss Porter, M.P., Lt.-Col. Ponton, R.O., and Major Stewart, of the 15th. Lt.-Col. Orr was in command. The Regiment marched to Victoria Avenue, passing up that thoroughfare to Pinnacle St., down to Dundas and up Front St. again, afterwards disbanding for dinner, the men dining in sections at various places. This afternoon and evening the boys will go to their homes. The men say the camp duties, though arduous, were pleasant.

A "DEMON" DISEASE

Doctors prescriptions and strongest Liniments had no effect on Mr. Humphreys' Rheumatism.

Two bottles South American Rheumatic Cure cured what he is pleased to call "this Demon from the Lower Regions."

Henry Humphrey, of London, Ont., expresses himself very strongly:—"I think Rheumatism is a demon from the lower regions, judging by my sufferings before I began using South American Rheumatic Cure. Doctors prescribed the strongest liniments with no more effect than water, but this great remedy had me up and about my work, and as well as ever, after taking only a couple of bottles." 44

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

In Our Front Store

We are now arranging for Especial Summer Sales.

Table sales—everybody knows when we put on a sale or series of sales the effort is a worthy one.

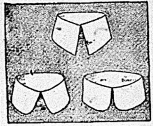
Comfortable Collars—The Convenient Coat Shirt In Favor.

It is the thoroughly well dressed man whose collar absolutely fits, and the precision herein expressed is carried into every detail of his apparel. To such dressers it will be interesting news that a favorite brand of collars is now being made in quarter inch sizes. The former half inch scale proved inadequate to many men, who found a given number of inches a trifle small and an additional half inch just a shade too large. Splitting the difference has brought the fitting to a nicety never before attained, for with quarter, half, three-quarter and full sizes at command there is no possible excuse for man's discomfort in apparel, so far as his collars are concerned.

As far as styles in collars are concerned, fashion laws are not stringent, and conservative masculine dressers avail themselves of the blessed privilege of wearing whatever they consider is most becoming. More depends on how a thing is worn and when it is worn than just exactly what specific shape is worn. With a proper understanding of what items should and should not be worn in conjunction, and a reasonable compliance with the time and place requirements of dress ethics, a man is at liberty to follow his individual preferences.

Both wing and fold collars are popular, and, while the fold has heretofore been almost universally identified with strictly negligee dress, it will be particularly smart this season to wear with a plaited, soft bosom shirt a low wing collar, supplemented by—not a four-in-hand, but a soft, broad end tie. The latest shapes in fold collars show well rounded points, brought closely together, or having moderate spacing; also the ultra fashionable shape, with sharp points three inches in depth.

In all collars medium heights prevail. This is speaking comparatively, for medium to one man may mean high to another and low to the third, and the correct height must afford no suggestion of a whitewashed fence surrounding the ears nor, on the other hand, leave an expanse of bare neck between the coat collar and hair. The former is bad enough, but the latter is positively criminal. Three of the newest shapes in fold collars are pictured on this page, and any one of them will prove comfortable for warm weather wear.



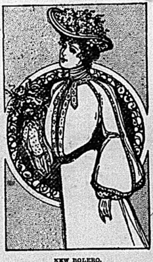
LATEST SHAPES IN FOLD COLLARS.

Shirts and shirtings are this season particularly attractive, showing a preponderance of fine, soft textures in delicate colorings and artistic designs. Gray is strongly in the lead, and some of its combinations with either white or black are immensely effective. Gun metal colorings are even more in fashion than last summer and have a delightful coolness of appearance.

The vogue of the coat shirt steadily increases, and the only wonder is that any other cut can exist. Any shirt which opens all the way down the front comes under this title. The coat shirt in dress form as it originally appeared proved an immediate success and has now extended its province to all kinds, the latest development being the soft bosom negligee. The wash silk negligee shirt, by the way, has proved such a comfortable garment in the past that it will have another and probably many more summers of popularity.—Designer.

The Bolero In Its Latest Guise.

The sketch shows one of the season's latest productions so clearly that description is superfluous. The features of the model obviously are the winglike sleeves, cleverly contrived in one with the bolero, which, by the bye, is perfectly tight fitting at the back.



NEW BOLERO.

On the Day's Outing.

Before starting on an all day trip, anoint the face in the morning with a good cold cream or white vaseline well rubbed into the skin. This prevents its burning. A little face powder of good quality puffed on top of the cold cream or vaseline is better still and lessens the effect of wind and sun on the skin.

Sunshine Furnace

Some Furnaces try to heat the whole neighborhood by sending 90 per cent. of the heat up the chimney. What you want is a Furnace that will heat your whole house, and send only the smoke up the chimney.

And this is just what the Sunshine Furnace does. It has more radiating surface than any other Furnace made, and all the heat is forced through the hot-air pipes—not into the smoke pipe and up the chimney.

The most economical, the greatest heat producer, the cleanest and simplest heater on the market.

Civic Committees' Regular Session.

A LONG SESSION, AT WHICH A FEW IMPORTANT THINGS WERE CONSIDERED.

The members of the Council present at the Civic Committees meetings last evening were Mayor Chown, Ald. Marsh, McFee, Green, Panter, Sulman, Paterson and Sinclair. Although the business transacted was not of great importance, being mostly routine, it took considerable time to transact the same.

PUBLIC WORKS.

Ald. McFee, chairman. The accounts passed were as follows:

Mac Machine Co.	$3.50
Walker Foundry Co.	16.12
Belleville Hardware Co.	76.00
Schuster Co.	41.00
Pay sheet	1474.95
W. W. Chown Co.	1.47
S. Stocker	3.80
S. Stocker	58.90

Mr. J. M. Hurley appeared before the committee in reference to a walk on Queen street, between William and Ann streets. He asked that the present walk be moved and placed outside the trees.

The matter was, after some discussion, left over until the Council meeting.

Mr. Wm. Chisholm asked the committee to build a granolithic walk on the west side of George street, between Bridge and Dundas streets. There was no walk at present for some distance. Out of the 11 taxpayers 8 had signed a petition to have the walk built. He would be willing to pay extra if the walk was built in front of his property this year, if the Council could not see their way clear to build the whole distance.

This matter was referred to the Council.

A petition was presented for a granolithic walk on a portion of the west side of Cedar street.—Referred.

The Surveyor stated that the crushing jaws of the crusher had broke, and the cost of repairing same would be $40 or $50.

Ald. McFee asked that the special committee appointed to see about repairs to the footbridge meet upon that structure on Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

The Surveyor called attention to the necessity of repairing, as soon as possible, one of the piers at the lower bridge, which was damaged by ice.—Referred to the Chairman and Surveyor.

Ald. Panter presented a statement showing that about $5000 out of $6000 of the Public Works appropriation had been expended already.

Ald. McFee said there was some work, especially repairing of sidewalks, that was absolutely necessary to be done.

The Surveyor was authorized to present a report at the Council meeting as to how much had been thus far expended on granolithic walks.

In the Market and City Property Parks and Light Committees the only business done was the passing of the following accounts:

J. Malyea	$7.50
H. McIninch	17.25
W. W. Chown Co.	29.82
E. McGrath	16.20
W. Stewart	4.05
Trenton Electric Co.	339.24

GAS.

Ald. Sinclair, chairman. The only business was the passing of these accounts:

J. Lewis	$160.24
F. Peck	219.22
Lyon & Marks	22.80
Schuster Co.	105.49
Pay sheet	104.00
S. Moon	1.84
J. Thompson	1.25
W. W. Chown Co.	10.30
Walker Foundry Co.	14.38

WATER.

Ald. Sulman, chairman. The accounts passed were:

Walker Foundry Co.	$4.75
H. McIninch	7.35
F. D. Ford	8.50
R. McPherson	4.66
J. Lewis Co.	145.22
Pay sheet	72.34

The chairman stated that since one of the pumps at the pump house had been improved a saving of one-half ton of coal per day would be effected.

Mr. Wm. Campbell, Chief of the Fire Department, addressed the committee, recommending that a four-inch main and a hydrant be placed within the hospital grounds. He considered it was a necessity, as that building had not proper fire protection.

It was decided to have the work done at a cost of about $650.

The chairman stated that a hydrant on the Canifton road had recently been broken by a runaway horse belonging to Mr. G. Foley, of Tyendinaga.

The Solicitor was instructed to notify Mr. Foley that he would have to pay for the same, as it is alleged that he was responsible for the runaway.

The chairman was authorized to procure some water meters and three new hydrants.

EXECUTIVE.

Ald. Panter, chairman. The accounts passed were:

C. B. Scantlebury	$6.25
Dr. Yeomans	3.35
City Clerk, for postage	4.00
Industrial School	15.07
W. R. Aylsworth	5.00

An account of $76.25, for Treasurer's disbursements, was presented. Of this amount $72 was for payment of the guarantee bonds procured by City Treasurer Price for 1903 and 1904.

Ald. Panter was not in favor of paying this, as the other officials of the city, who had to furnish bonds, did so at their own expense.

The Clerk stated that in other places the city paid for the Treasurer's bonds, and Mr. Price thought that his should be paid in this way.

Of the account $4.25 was passed, and the matter of paying for the bonds was referred to the Council.

On motion $12.50 on account was ordered to be paid to the members of the Court of Revision.

Ald. Marsh asked the Mayor about the drill shed building.

The Mayor—"Everything is now clear and satisfactory to the Government."

This concluded the business and the committees adjourned.

LIKE A MIRACLE.

THE WONDERFUL RECOVERY OF A NIPISSING MAN.

Stricken With Partial Paralysis He Was Unable to Use Either Right Arm or Right Leg.

Mr. John Craig, a well known farmer living near Kells, Nipissing district, Ont., is another of the many paralytics who owes his present good health and ability to go about—if not life itself—to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr. Craig gives his experience as follows: "But for the blessing of God and the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I do not believe that I would be alive to-day. I was stricken with that terrible affliction, partial paralysis. I had absolutely no power in my right arm or leg. I was not able to sit up—in fact if I tried to do so I would fall over. I had to be lifted like a child, and my family and friends believed death was very near. The doctor told me that he could do nothing for me, and that I was liable at any moment to have a second stroke which would carry me off. I was in this deplorable condition when I was advised to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I sent for three boxes and before they were all used I could move the fingers on my hand, which had hitherto been absolutely numb and powerless. You can scarcely imagine my joy at this convincing proof that the pills were helping me. From this on I kept getting stronger and the control of my paralyzed limbs gradually came back until I was again able to walk around and eventually to work. To my neighbors my cure seems like a miracle, as not one of them ever expected to see me out of bed again. I gladly give permission to publish the story of my cure with the wish that it may bring life and hope and activity to some other sufferer."

The cure of Mr. Craig gives additional evidence that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not an ordinary medicine, and that their power to cure in all troubles of the blood or nerves places them beyond all other medicines. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or direct by mail at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. See that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around every box.

Public School Grants.

The following are the amounts of Legislative Public School grants payable for the year to the various minor municipalities of the County of Hastings:

Carlow	$ 82.00
Dungannon	92.00
Elzevir	156.00
Faraday	130.00
Hungerford	434.00
Huntingdon	264.00
McClure, etc.	111.00
Herschel, etc.	233.00
Madoc	299.00
Marmora	178.00
Mayo	64.00
Rawdon	389.00
Sidney	422.00
Thurlow	422.00
Tudor and Cashel	109.00
Limerick	62.00
Wallaston	92.00
Tyendinaga	310.00
Deseronto	429.00
Madoc village	135.00
Marmora village	98.00
Stirling village	99.00

These grants are apportioned amongst the municipalities on the basis of the total population as shown by the assessment rolls. It is therefore necessary in the interest of education in the county that officials who are entrusted with the enumeration do their work well.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Orders for bookbinding should be left at this office. It is surprising how nice a volume can be made of these magazines, even though they are somewhat soiled from much handling. LOOK AT YOUR SILVER.

WORN OR DEFACED QUARTERS OR HALF DOLLARS CANNOT BE REDEEMED.

"There is no legislation for the redemption of silver coin," said a Crown official when questioned on the subject. "In England an appropriation is made for the redemption of worn coin, but when once it is issued in Canada it becomes the property of the public and the Government is not further responsible for it. The only redress any one can get is to have the person arrested who gave you the coin. If you try to pass it you are liable to prosecution."

Such is the law regarding worn and defaced coins, as a British immigrant learned to his cost when he tried in vain to get some one to take the half-dollar with three large letters stamped on it, that had been given to him in change.

When he sought redress at the sub-treasury he was told by an official that he was just two weeks too late. Previous to that time he would have received face value for it, but instructions had been issued at Ottawa to discontinue the redemption of mutilated coin or coin worn smooth or that had accidentally been injured.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and which especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

GRAET SEA POWERS.

How Great Britain and Japan and Russia and France Compare.

A return of the numerical strength of the fleets of the chief naval powers issued recently as a Parliamentary paper enables the following interesting comparison to be made of the fighting power of the Anglo-Japanese and Franco-Russian alliance:

	Great Britain and Japan.	France and Russia.
Battleships, 1st class	55	38
Battleships, 2nd class	5	13
Battleships, 3rd class	2	2
Coast defence vessels, armored.	8	25
Cruisers, armored	36	23
Cruisers, protected, 1st class	21	12
Cruisers, protected, 2nd class	61	10
Cruisers, protected, 3rd class	40	19
Cruisers, unprotected	17	4
Torpedo vessels	33	75
Torpedo boat destroyers	143	71
Torpedo boats	160	400
Submarines	8	27

The figures for France and Russia do not allow for Russian losses in the Far East, which are at present four battleships, four cruisers and four destroyers.

Arranged by types of warships the following are the comparative figures for the greater nations:

	Battleships.	Armored cruisers.	Protected cruisers.	Destroyers.	Torpedo boats.
Britain	55	28	102	124	87
France	30	15	40	24	233
Russia	21	8	10	47	167
Germany	30	4	22	87	88
Italy	16	5	18	11	128
United States	12	2	20	20	35
Japan	7	8	20	19	82

The figures given for submarines—namely, Britain 8, France 26, Russia, Germany and Italy 1 each, United States 8, and Japan none—do not tally with later information, and therefore are not given in the above abstract.

The Reason Why Oils, Plasters, Pastes, etc., Do Not Cure Cancer.

Cancer is a constitutional disease, often inherited, and no local treatment can do more than remove the diseased part and the cause of the trouble remains in the system and the trouble returns in 9 cases out of 10.

New Year's Superstitions.

The following superstitions in connection with New Year's are still believed in various parts of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales: On New Year's morning go to a well or fountain and leave an apple and nosegay, and the water will keep fresh and be more wholesome all the year. If a dark complexioned man crosses your threshold first on New Year's day you will be prosperous; if a blond, unlucky, and if a redheaded man dire disaster will surely follow. Before locking the door for the night on New Year's eve place a gold coin near it and let it remain there until the church bells ring the next morning, and you will have plenty of money all that year. So strong is the belief in this last adage in some places that dark complexioned men are paid a small gratuity to call early and walk through the first floor of the house, entering by the back door and leaving by the front.

The Club Man

As home from the Club he wanders late
He gently smiles at the wiles of fate
For he knows the effect of wine and malt
Is quickly banished by Abbey's Salt.

A night at the club—an unusually elaborate banquet—even a "bird and a bottle"—ought to be followed by a foaming glass of ABBEY'S SALT, next morning.

It cleans the stomach and bowels—stirs up the liver—clears the head—gives snap and vim to the whole system—and sends a man to business as "bright as a dollar."

It makes the clubman, the epicure, forget he has a liver.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt Is "the Joy of Living."

JAP DEFEAT REPORTED

Persistent Rumor of a Naval Battle at Port Arthur.

Twenty-One Japanese Warships Said to Have Participated in An Engagement on Thursday—Repeated Hand-to-Hand Fights in the Dalin Pass—Russian War Office Confirms News of Japanese Advance on Kaichou—General Advance.

St. Petersburg, July 9.—It is reported in a special despatch from Liaoyang, under Thursday's date, that a persistent rumor is current there to the effect that a naval engagement has occurred at Port Arthur, in which twenty-one Japanese warships participated, resulting in a Russian victory. A similar report was current at Liaoyang July 5, the location of the engagement then being given as northward of Gensan, Corea.

Heavy Firing Heard.

Che Foo, July 9.—Junks which passed through the Gulf of Pechili on Thursday, July 7, report having heard heavy firing at sea all that afternoon.

Hand to Hand Fights.

Liaoyang, July 9.—There have been repeated skirmishes during the past few days at Dalin Pass, some of them being hand-to-hand encounters. The Japanese have a tremendous force east of Liaoyang, and they evidently want to force a big battle before the rains set in.

Japs' General Advance.

Gen. Sakharoff, commander of the eastern army, in a long despatch to the general staff, dated Thursday, reports outpost skirmishes over a wide territory throughout July 5 and 6, which indicate a general advance of the Japanese, who are driving back the Russian advance posts. Sakharoff says the Russian losses during the fighting of July 6 have been definitely ascertained, but it is known that two officers and fifteen men were killed or wounded. He says:

"In general we observed July 6 that the enemy was taking the offensive simultaneously along his whole front extending from the seashore as far as the Valley of the Chinchan River. On the morning of July 7 a vast camp of the enemy was discovered in the neighborhood of Siaokhetzza. At 8 a.m., July 7, the enemy occupied the heights near Baositshja. No rains have fallen recently."

Japs Had 700 Casualties.

Liaoyang, July 9.—In the recent night attack at Noigan the Japanese lost 200 killed and 500 wounded.

Gen. Kuroki, talking to a Russian officer, who had been taken prisoner, said the Japanese intend to take possession of all Southern Manchuria, establishing themselves at Port Arthur and Yinkow (the port of Newchwang), which it is proposed to fortify, garrison with large bodies of troops and supply with long range artillery.

If the Russians recaptured these places, Gen. Kuroki declared, it would be at the cost of an enormous amount of money and 800,000 fresh troops from Europe.

All Along the Line.

St. Petersburg, July 9.—A special despatch from Newchwang, dated Thursday, says Gen. Kuroki is advancing all along the line, and adds that Japanese officers are organizing Chinese bandit bands throughout the Liao Valley for an attack on Mukden.

squadron will sail from Cronstadt, July 28, under sealed orders. Complete mystery enshrouds its destination.

General Fight at Hand.

St. Petersburg, July 9.—With the return of three days' fine weather, drying the roads at the theatre of war, the military authorities here are once more inclined to believe in the probability of heavy fighting and even in the possibility of a general engagement.

After Severe Fighting.

Tokio, July 9.—After severe fighting Gen. Oku occupied Kaiping yesterday.

TROOPS RECALLED.

Halifax Men Ordered Off the Sydney Steel Works.

Sydney, C.B., July 9.—The Department of Militia at Ottawa have issued orders for the recall of the Halifax militia from Sydney, as the result of certain irregularities in connection with bringing them here. One company each of the 66th and 63rd Regiments will leave for home by this morning's train, while the other two companies will only be retained until their places can be filled by men of the 94th Battalion of Argyll Highlanders, who have been ordered to report full strength if it is deemed necessary.

Nation Without a Language.

Among the people of the world the Swiss are alone in having no language they can call their own. According to a recent visitor to the little country about three-fourths of the people of Switzerland speak German, while the remainder divide four other languages among them—mainly French and Italian—the languages varying, as a rule, according to the proximity of the people to each country whose tongue they speak. Public documents and notices are printed in both French and German. In the Swiss national parliament the members make their speeches either in French or German, for nearly all the members understand both languages. The orders of the president are translated by an official interpreter and furnished to the newspapers in both languages.

SWEPT OVER THE FALLS

Tragic Death of Cribman Albert Levine at Niagara.

Fell From a Crib, He Made a Most Strenuous Attempt to Stem the Great Force of the Rushing Waters—Got Hold of the Rocks But Only to Fall Back Exhausted and Over the Watery Abyss.

Niagara Falls, July 9.—A most thrilling and fatal accident occurred at the crib-work of the Toronto Power Company's works at 4.30 yesterday afternoon. As one of the cribmen, named Albert Levine, was walking along the side of the crib next the riverside at a point near the lower end he stumbled, and, losing his balance, fell in the rushing water, and in a second was swept out of reach of anyone on the crib. He was seen to struggle hard against the great force of deep, tumbling and rushing waters that was hurling him with great rapidity to the abyss of the Horseshoe Falls. About a mile below he seemed to be gaining ground on the rushing water, and foot by foot he seemed to be getting closer to the shore, and by the time he reached a point near the intake of the city waterworks pumping station, in his superhuman struggles managed to reach the rocks, and, grappling them and partially raising himself out of the water, he fell back completely exhausted before the eyes of several people who were unable to render him any assistance. The rushing water in a few seconds swept his exhausted form over the falls, a few feet below. Levine came here from St. Andrews, Argentine, Que., where his mother resides.

Drowned While Bathing.

St. John, N.B., July 9.—James Malcolm, son of Andrew Malcolm of St. John, and a young lad named George Usher of Grand Bay, N. B., were drowned at the latter place yesterday morning while bathing. Both bodies were recovered. Malcolm was 22 years of age, and studying for the Presbyterian ministry.

The Treacherous Don River.

Toronto, July 9.—The Don added another to its long list of victims yesterday evening. Ernest Albert Cooper, a lad of 17, living at 189 Bleecker street, went with a number of companions to a point immediately to the north of Winchester street bridge for a plunge. The place is the recognized "swimming hole." Cooper went into the water and swam with the rest of the bathers for a short time. At this point the stories of his comrades become conflicting. It was over an hour after the first plunge before they missed him and instituted a search. A young man named Alfred Wright finally found the body on the river bottom. An hour's work at resuscitation methods failed, and the body was then taken to the home of the lad's father. No one of his friends can give a clear idea of how the lad met his end.

Seven Blown to Pieces.

Sudbury, Ont., July 9.—Seven men killed and two men injured is the result of a premature dynamite explosion upon the new C.P.R. Sudbury-Toronto line. The accident occurred on the afternoon of the 6th inst., about four miles south of Romford, at which point the proposed line joins the main line of the C.P.R., a few miles east of Sudbury. The dead are three Austrains, three Finlanders and the walking boss, H. Poole, of Wakefield, Que. The bodies of the killed save Poole were literally blown to pieces. A foreigner named McIntyre and a laborer were badly injured, but will recover. It is difficult to get authentic information as to the cause of the explosion, as all immediately concerned in the work are dead.

Brakeman's Horrible Death.

Hamilton, July 9.—George B. Rogers, a G.T.R. brakeman, met with a horrible death last night. He left Hamilton on an east-bound freight at 10.50 p.m. When the train arrived at Stony Creek he was missing. His comrades came back along the line and at 1 o'clock yesterday morning found his mutilated body on the tracks under the James street bridge. It is supposed he fell off his train, was stunned and was run over by a yard engine. He lived at 154 Sophia street.

Parkhill Girl's Death.

Detroit, Mich., July 9.—A girl whose name is said to be Gertie Cays, but who lived under an assumed name, died Thursday afternoon at the Emergency Hospital from the effects of a heavy dose of morphine, taken, it was supposed, as the result of a quarrel with a soldier lover from Fort Wayne. Just as the girl was being removed from her room to the hospital a postman delivered a letter from the girl's parents, who live near Parkhill, Ont., asking her to come home, as her sister was dying and her mother was sick. Her body was taken to a morgue and her parents communicated with.

Mercury Found Body.

St. Catharines, July 9.—Last evening the searchers for the body of 17-year-old Edward Plumley, who was drowned Tuesday near lock No. 2 of the old canal, were rewarded. The body was recovered at Port Dalhousie, three or four miles away from the scene of the accident. A novel method was employed to find the remains. A loaf of bread containing quick-silver was put in the water and the loaf traveled to Port Dalhousie and remained stationary over the spot where the body lay.

Baby's Body in River.

Winnipeg, July 9.—A small boy fishing at the foot of Barber street yesterday morning found the body of an infant about three weeks old floating near the river's edge. There was an abrasion on the head, and it is thought the infant was killed before being thrown into the river. The body had evidently been in the water less than 24 hours.

Wreck on the Wabash.

Detroit, July 9.—Wabash trains 5 and 6, which left the Union Depot about midnight last night, collided on the Viaduct, near Eighteenth street. A Pullman sleeper was derailed and toppled off the elevation. It is reported that several were killed and many injured. The trains were bound for Buffalo and Chicago.

EASTERN SECTION, G.T.P.

F. B. Wade, M.P., For Annapolis, N.S., Chosen to Be Chairman of the Commission to Build It.

Montreal, July 9.—It has leaked out here that F. B. Wade, M.P., for Annapolis, N.S., is to be chairman of the commission to build the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

The Government is finding some trouble in chosing from the long list of friends who would like to go on the commission.

F. B. WADE, M.P.

It was this question that brought Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Fielding in hot haste to Montreal last Sunday by a special train. Their conference with Charles M. Hays and two or three of Sir Wilfrid's Montreal advisers is understood to have cleared the way for the appointment of Mr. Wade to the chairmanship of the commission, which is now definite.

Greenway's Chance Is Poor.

The commissioner from the west will be either Hon. Thomas Greenway or Fred Young, brother of Senator Finlay Young, the chances being in favor of the latter.

The Government has not reached a decision as to the commissioners from Ontario and Quebec, but the appointments will be announced in a few days.

Fletcher Bath Wade, M.P. for Annapolis, N.S., was born at Granville, Annapolis County, September 6, 1852. He was educated at Belle Isle and elected to the House of Commons at the general election of 1900.

TIMOTHY HEALY WRATHY.

Fiercely Attacks Redmond During Debate on Land Bill.

London, July 9.—In the course of a discussion of the Irish Land Bill in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Timothy M. Healy, Nationalist, fiercely attacked John E. Redmond, the Irish leader, for selling his estate on the basis of twenty-four and a half years purchase. His remarks were greeted with a prolonged uproar and cries of "Traitor!" Mr. Healy said the Nationalists had honored him (Healy) by turning him out of the party in December, 1900. This statement was fiercely resented by the Nationalists, and Mr. Healy, who was unable to proceed, left his seat.

7 Sutherland Sisters Hair Grower

GREW THIS HAIR

Testimonial No. 422.

MISS NORA GASTAGER
2108 Centre Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

When the scalp throws off either dandruff or a gummy substance, it is an evidence of scalp disease, and no time should be lost in correcting it. You certainly would not hesitate to take treatment were you to look at this matter through a magnifying glass. When highly magnified it resembles a working mass of insects. These creatures absorb the nutriment or life-sap of the scalp causing the scalp to become dry and feverish, resulting in the loss of hair and finally baldness. Seven Sutherland Sisters' Hair-Grower and Scalp Cleaner works wonders in all such cases. It thoroughly eradicates all trace of scalp bacteria and makes the hair grow unusually long, strong and beautiful. One 50 cent bottle is enough to show you that it will do all this and even more. NOW at all druggists, two sizes, 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

PARKER NOMINATED.

New York's Chief Justice of Appeals Democratic Standard Bearer For President—Henry G. Davis For Vice-President

St. Louis, Mo., July 11.—At 5.45 on Saturday morning, Alton B. Parker, chief judge of the New York State Court of Appeals, was nominated by the Democratic convention as presidential candidate. On the first ballot he was given 658 votes out of the required 667, and the nomination was made unanimous. In the afternoon, however, a sensation was sprung when a telegram was received from Judge Parker, from Esopus, N.Y., stating that unless the convention would accept him as an avowed believer in the gold standard he must decline the nomination. After a conference of leaders, it was decided to make it the sense of the convention that Judge Parker's attitude on the money question was fully understood by the delegates before he was placed in nomination, and that the telegram therefore disclosed no new feature. This was done.

Late in the evening Henry G. Davis of West Virginia, was nominated on the first ballot as vice-presidential candidate, and the convention adjourned sine die.

German Fleet on a Visit.

Plymouth, Eng., July 11.—The most powerful German fleet ever seen in a British port steamed into the naval base yesterday on a visit of courtesy. The eight battleships and seven cruisers were received with artillery salutes, and the British and German admirals exchanged visits.

Victim of Cuban War.

Madrid, July 11.—Gen. Toral, who commanded the Spanish garrison at Santiago when that place surrendered to the United States forces, died yesterday in an insane asylum near here. The general brooded over his capitulation until he became incurably demented.

Capture of Kaichou Makes Its Seizure Sure.

Mikado's Troops Are Now Ready and Prepare to Close in on the Enemy—Kuropatkin Forced Still Further North—Japs on Yinkow Road—Report of a Fight- Kuropatkin's Plans For Invasion of British India.

St. Petersburg, July 11.—Lieut.-Gen. Sakharoff, in a despatch to the general staff, confirms the report of the Japanese occupation of Kaichou. He says that the Russian loss did not exceed 150 killed or wounded. Gen. Sakharoff adds that the Japanese are on the Yinkow road.

Gen. Sakharoff says: "Our detachment remained during July 8 at Kaichou station, having its advance posts on the right bank of the Kantakhe River, the enemy occupying the heights on the left bank and fortifying themselves thereon.

"Our battery on the railroad bridge opened fire at the enemy's patrols. Towards noon a fusilade occurred between a detachment of the enemy and our company and our losses were six wounded.

Along the Seashore.

"Towards the evening of July 8 the enemy's force, consisting of four divisions and a brigade, could be made out in front of Kaichou, extending along the seashore. At dawn, July 9, the enemy resumed the offensive upon the rear guard of our detachment, which retired about 6.30 in the morning from Kinchou to nine and one-half miles northward.

"At 10 o'clock, under heavy pressure, our rear guard retired on our position at Makhuntsiguiga and Yaclintas. The rear guard held this position under a heavy fire until two o'clock in the afternoon, when in accordance with instructions it retired slowly and in perfect order on the third position, just as our main body was concentrating at Magachapu and on the position at Makhuntsiguiga.

"The enemy kept up a very heavy cannonading for two hours uninterruptedly, but our battery carried on the struggle successfully, firing along the Shuanlunsa Pass. It finally fell back with hardly any casualties.

"On our right flank our horse battery shelled the Japanese battery. At the same time the enemy's cavalry advanced slowly along the shore road to Yinkow.

Losses Do Not Exceed 150.

"Our losses are not yet known, but according to the commander of our forces they do not exceed 150. Among the killed was Count Nyrodt, captain on the general staff."

Gen. Sakharoff also reports an ambush of the Japanese twenty-five miles north of Siuyen, when the Japanese had one officer and eleven dragoons killed or wounded.

On July 7 Gen. Sakharoff says the Japanese began to advance, but not in considerable force, toward Siaosyou, occupying Sinochan.

Operations Now Focused.

London, July 11.—The capture of Kaichou (Kaiping) by General Oku establishes a Japanese line clear across the Liaotung Peninsula and brings the operations of the Mikado's forces against Kuropatkin to a focus.

The evacuation of Newchwang by the Russians seems the only logical move, and with the fall of this town and its port, Yinkow, the Japanese will secure a harbor close to the centre of operations for landing men and supplies for an immediate attack on Kuropatkin's main force.

That these men and supplies are even now in transports in the Gulf of Pechili is shown by the reports which have come in during the last few days, which state that a large fleet of Japanese steamers is near Yinkow.

Despatches from St. Petersburg indicate that Kuropatkin is expected to retire from Tatchekiao, and even Haicheng, and concentrate his forces in Liaoyang, which has been fortified elaborately.

This he may not be able to accomplish, however, as the Russian official reports indicate the presence of a great body of Japanese within striking distance of the fortifications. It may be that the great battle of the war will be fought in the open.

Fight Near Fenchui Pass.

Liaoyang, July 11.—A column of Russians, after proceeding to a point about seven miles northwest of Fenchui Pass, on the Liaoyang-Fengwangcheug high road, halted at night, worn out with heavy marching and fighting. The Japanese hurried up fresh troops and attacked them at dawn with a superior force. The Russians retired fighting. Their losses numbered 300. The Japanese also suffered severely.

Another forward movement of the Russian Rifle Brigade began during the night of July 6. The Russians attacked the Japanese position in the darkness. No particulars of the engagement are yet obtainable, but it is believed that a severe fight occurred.

The Japanese force of 25,000 which was advancing toward Mukden, has now fallen back. Similar backward movements are reported from other points. Chinese report that General Kuroki's headquarters have been established at Fenchui Pass.

Left 350 Dead.

Rome July 11.—A despatch from Liaoyang says that a fierce battle has been fought at Hoang, near Liaoyang, between a force of Russians numbering 4,000, led by Gen. Keller, and a supposedly superior number of the enemy. Although the Russians struggled valiantly they were compelled to retreat before determined assaults by the Japanese, and left 350 dead upon the field. The battle ended in the complete rout of the Russians. The loss of the Japanese is unkonwn.

Both Squadrons Out.

St. Petersburg, July 11.—The Associated Press is informed that there is reason to believe that the Vladivostock and Port Arthur squadrons have sailed again. The Admiralty does not deny that both squadrons have gone out.

Riots Against Christians.

London, July 11.—The Che Foo correspondent of The Standard, in a despatch dated July 9, says: "The American Consul-General (John Fowler) received news last night that anti-Christian riots have broken out at Chaoyuen, about 65 miles south of Tenchoufoo and 85 miles west of Che Foo. Immediate assistance was asked.

"The Taotai despatched troops and telegraphed the authorities at Hwanghsen and Tengcheufoo also to send assistance if required."

INVASION OF BRITISH INDIA.

Planned By General Kuropatkin According to London Express.

London, July 11.—The Daily Express to-day prints what it claims is Gen. Kuropathin's signed plan of invasion of British India, which, it is stated, was filed in the Russian war office as the official method of procedure in case of a war between Russia and Great Britain. The document goes into minute details and is three columns in length.

Briefly summed up, General Kuropatkin divided such a war into two campaigns, one ending with the capture of Herat and the other after two or three years' administration of the country, with the capture of Kashmir, Kandahar and Kabul. After that, says Gen. Kuropatkin, the British would find themselves without native support in India proper.

The plan deals minutely with the method Russia ought to adopt to secure the co-operation of the Persians and Afghans by an elaborate system of agents and sheikhs. It estimates that one Turkestan army corps would be required in the initial stage of the campaign, which "I should prefer to begin in November, as the weather is healthier for the men and all Russian ports are frozen. A casus belli can, any time when required, be found through a collision between Russian and Afghan outposts."

General Kuropatkin's alleged plan for the invasion of British India will not be taken very seriously, and if it be genuine, goes far to explain his fiasce in Manchuria.

Threat of Fleet Scared Sultan.

Vienna, July 11.—A despatch from Constantinople received here says that the American Minister Leishman handed a note to the porte declaring that unless a prompt settlement of the school question was arranged, a United States fleet would appear in Turkish waters. The Sultan ordered the grand vizier to comply with the American Minister's demand.

Suicide Rather Than Surrender.

Buckingham, Que., July 11.—Word has been received from Notre Dames De La Salette that Joseph Guenette, a resident of that place, who was fleeing to the United States to avoid arrest, shot himself at Poupore yesterday afternoon. He was 33 years of age and leaves a widow and three young children.

FOLLOWING HIS CHIEF.

The independent Ottawa Journal grows reminiscent and quotes from the famous letter of the late Alexander Mackenzie, in which he said:

"Some attempt to storm the office; some dig trenches at a distance and approach in regular siege form. I feel like the besieged, lying on my arms night and day. I have offended at least twenty Parliamentary friends by my defence of the citadel. A weak Minister here would ruin the party in a month, and the country very soon. So I must drudge on as best I may, and carry out the experiment of doing right whatever happens, and trusting to have a majority in the House to sustain me, and when that fails, I will go out cheerfully, if not joyfully."

The above hardly gives the full force of Mr. Mackenzie's letter, but it will answer the purpose. Commenting on it The Journal says:

"Alexander Mackenzie, who wrote these words while Prime Minister, was the man who appointed John Lorne McDougall Auditor-General, just before Mackenzie was driven from power. And now the Auditor-General is going out, with good reason to have feelings of the same kind. What has happened in the Liberal party since it attained power last, illustrates alone how much cause Mackenzie must have had to write as he did; but even Mackenzie, troubled as he was, would have found it difficult to believe that a man like Laurier would assist to drive the Auditor-General out of office.

"Mackenzie and McDougall were kindred spirits, in point of rugged honesty. Our politics were never comfortable for such men, and seem to be getting worse."

Public affairs, certainly, are "getting worse," and have been in that condition for the past few years. In spite of all its protestations and promises, the Laurier Government has made no effort to carry them out, and now, on the eve of an election, it has prepared a scheme to open the way for gigantic corruption, as its only hope of being able to hold on to power, and that it may be able to work its scheme the better, it has driven the Auditor-General out of office. "Getting worse!" There is no doubt about it, and worse still it will continue to grow till the people interpose their electoral veto.

TIMELY TOPICS.

In these days of cheap sales, why doesn't somebody have a cheap sale of thermometers and fans?

It might not be a bad idea, to-night, for the Council to meet in the band stand on Queen Victoria park. It would be much better then the warm Council Chamber, and the hot air, too, might dry up some of that surplus water.

* * * *

Talking of the bonds of good fellowship which exist in the Council, of course you don't refer to the City Treasurer's bonds.

* * *

Through an error in correction on Saturday, the type-setting machines made us say, in connection with an item about the footbridge, "It is to be hoped that SOME of the City Council will fall over into the drink." What we wrote was: "It is to be hoped that NONE of them," etc. The Intelligencer has nothing but the friendliest feelings towards the City Fathers, and wishes them no such dire fate as that outlined on Saturday. Some of 'em might not be able to swim, and others, in their terrible plight, might drink some of the water.

Judge Parker, U. S. Presidential candidate, was in swimming when he received the news of his nomination. He should surely be a clean candidate.

Commenting on the recent flag incident in the United States, the Brockville Times says:

"All the talk about 'international amity' and 'hands across the sea' is negatived by these flag incidents."

Alas! and alack-a-day! There seems to be more truth than poetry in that.

Lord Dundonald, we notice, is being entertained by many towns and cities. If we had been born on "The ither side o' Tweed" we would suggest that the braw lads of Camp Rob Roy, S.O.S., might invite him to this city. The Earl of Dundonald is a member of their great order, and he would surely be warmly received in Belleville, not only by the "foreigners," but by Englishman and Irishmen as well. It would be a sight for sore eyes to see Dundonald, in a carriage, coming down from the station, in the midst of a procession, with Piper McIntosh at the head of it, blowing the "Flowers of the Forest." Hoot, mon! Every flag in the city would be flying.

A Montreal milkman was fined $60 because his cans were filthy and contained enough microbes to kill 3,000 children. It is gratifying to reflect that Belleville milkmen do not lay themselves liable to any such charge as the above. But the Montreal milkman got off light.

* * *

Dr. Pickell, who was recommended for a commission by Lord Dundonald, and crowded out by Hon. Syd. Fisher, enlisted in the ranks and went to camp as a sergeant. Commenting on which the Ottawa Citizen says:

"The spectacle of Hon. Sydney Fisher riding about the Laprairie camp, gloating over Sergt. Pickell, of the 13th Light Horse, places the Hon. Sydney Fisher in his proper perspective before the public eye."

With the Public Works Committee's appropriation nearly gone it begins to appear doubtful whether there will be a new footbridge this summer or not. The Aldermen, of course, cannot perform impossibilities, but it does really appear that action in regard to the bridge should have been taken long ago. Everything, this year, seems to be given a back seat for the new sidewalks, which, of course, are a fine asset, but if, as we are told, the Public Works Committee's appropriation has been largely spent in paying men who provide material for the walks, it certainly seems that a mistake has been made. Would it not have been better to pay all the expenses in connection with the new sidewalks out of the appropriation for them, and leave the Public Works appropriation for road-making, repairs of old walks, bridges, etc.? It would certainly appear so just now.

Gen. Kuropatkin has formulated a plan to capture British India, which makes the experts smile. Gen. Pat is rapidly getting down to the level of a genuine false alarm.

Emperor William has been sending another telegram, and, as usual, putting his foot in it. Some day Bill's facile pen will bring him the trouble he is looking for.

FIRE AT DESERONTO.

SASH AND DOOR FACTORY HAD A NARROW ESCAPE ON SUNDAY MORNING.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Deseronto, July 11.—A fire broke out at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning which completely destroyed Messrs. Hinchey & Morden's tinsmith's establishment. The fire caused quite a commotion, as it was near the Sash and Door Factory, in fact many people thought it was that place by the sound of the fire alarm. Had it not been raining hard at the time there would probably have been a big fire, as burning shingles flew for quite a distance. The employes of the Sash Factory were not aware of the fire, as they left on Saturday evening to camp across the bay till Monday morning.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and while especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and with no reservation." For sale by all druggists.

(Alleged Theft.

On Saturday afternoon the Magistrate was engaged in hearing evidence in a case of alleged theft. Mrs. A. E. Gerem was charged with stealing a handbag, the property of Mrs. J. H. Oils, Plasters and Operations Fail to Cure Cancer

There is a peculiar condition of the blood which favors the growth of cancer germs in the system, and that is the reason that local treatment like the above fails to make permanent cures.

Kelvin and Figures.

Most of the stories about Lord Kelvin which obtain in Glasgow are founded upon the occasional inability of the great man who lisped in logarithms to bring his mind to a childish sum.

The famous one tells how on his blackboard he once made two and two five and, hearing the chuckles of his delighted class, altered it hastily to three. He was, however, once heard to say, in his characteristic slow way, with his beautiful use of the soft Irish r: "Seven times nine, Mr. Mac-far-lane, are a hundred and what? Pause. But no; seven times nine cannot be a hundred and anything, Mr. Mac-far-lane, for the square root of a hundred is ten."

It is also told of him that, walking one day with a friend in Largs, he noticed that it had begun to rain. He questioned his friend closely as to where his coat and umbrella were, and having satisfied himself that his friend had not these articles with him he said, "Well, in that case, doctor, we will walk back beneath this belt of trees, for the rain will not per-co-late the leaves, doctor, for twen-ty minutes."

DIZZY'S OLDEST TENANT.

Thomas Coates, Who Has Retired From Wardenship of Hughenden Church.

To have occupied the post of churchwarden for 40 years is in itself a feat of which few can boast, but to have claimed during part of that period the personal friendship in the dual capacity of fellow parishioner and tenant of the late Lord Beaconsfield is more enviable still, says Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper. This, however, is the record of Mr. Thomas Coates, who has just retired from being warden of Hughendon Church after serving for close upon half a century. Seen by a Lloyd's representative, he explained that old age was the cause of his retirement, and when it comes to be said that he is within a few days of his 88th year, one can appreciate his desire for a rest. Seated in his cosy parlor, with—appropriately enough—a bust of the great statesman looking approvingly on, the old gentleman was reminiscent of the time during which he was Lord Beaconsfield's tenant, "for," said he, "I am the oldest tenant on the estate."

He recalled his first meeting with Disraeli after he took the Manor Farm, which adjoins Hughendon Manor on the top of the hill, upon the slope of which in the trim churchyard rest the remains of the great statesman.

"He walked over from the manor to the farm," said Mr. Coates, "and remarked that I was his nearest neighbor. We talked about many matters, and he wound up by saying that when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer I should be his First Lord of the Treasury. I told him I hoped I should live to see him Chancellor; and I did. But"—with a quiet twinkle in his eye—"I never became First Lord."

Mr. Coates also mentioned how he met Disraeli one day when he was on his way to Slough Agricultural Show. "He asked me where I was going, and I told him to Slough. He said he was going to the same place, and asked me to go along with him and tell him something about crops and so forth, because he was to make a speech at the dinner. He mentioned that he was coming back by a certain train but when I pointed out that the train did not stop at Slough he said, 'Don't you trouble about that. Just watch when I get up to go and come along.' Well, he made a long speech, and up I jumped when he rose from the table. Outside I found a carriage with a pair of grey horses in. He told the coachman to drive to another station, and we just caught the train. Before we got in he said to me, 'Just give the driver half a sovereign, for they've cleared me out at Slough.'"

"And the half-sovereign?" queried our representative.

"Oh," said Mr. Coates, "the footman brought that down to the house the next morning."

Referring to the Reform Bill of the late sixties, Mr. Coates said "The Squire," as Disraeli was called at Hughendon once asked his opinion of it. He wanted Mr. Coates' view, because it would probably reflect the opinion of the vast majority of the electorate. "I think you have gone too far, sir," said Mr. Coates.

"Ah, well, don't you see," replied Disraeli, "it's this way. If we don't give them the franchise, someone else will."

"All of which," added Mr. Coates, "showed what a far-seeing man he was, although I thought he was wrong at the time."

An interesting sidelight upon the domestic side of Beaconsfield's character was shown by the way in which he interested himself in the wedding of Mr. Coates' eldest daughter. "He came to me," said Mr. Coates, "and asked whether it was true that my daughter was to be married. I said it was, and he asked when. I told him the day, and he at once said he would like to be present, and also to bring Lady Beaconsfield too. I thanked him, and explained that I had not asked him because it looked like a liberty. However, he came and brought her ladyship, notwithstanding that she had a sprained foot, in a carriage. He proposed the toast of the "Bride and Bridegroom,' and made them a present of his works, and a gold brooch for my daughter, which she wears to-day."

As for notabilities who had been there, Mr. Coates could not recall the scores he had seen and conversed with, but he has a vivid recollection of his landlord bringing the late Duke of Wellington to see a famous litter of Berkshire pigs which he had, and of the two men talking learnedly thereon.

As for the great statesman's general ways, he was wonderfully kindhearted and thoughtful to anyone he knew, although he generally appeared so austere to strangers. He had a word and a nod for everyone. "And," concluded Mr. Coates, "nobody could have wished for a better landlord—he was of the best."

Some Odd Plants.

There are few plants that have not been utilized in one way or another by mankind for food, paper, drugs, or in other ways. Among many not so well known may be mentioned the Japanese wax tree, bearing bunches of fruit growing like grapes which contain a species of wax used in making candles. Another tree, found in the Pacific islands and known as the candle nut, yields a large quantity of oil, while the kernels are strung together on a stick and lighted as a candle. The fruit of the candle tree is between three and four feet in length and about an inch in diameter, and of a yellowish color. As they are seen hanging from the tree they present the appearance of a number of wax candles. The telegraph plant, which grows in India, is a slender, erect shrub, so called because of some resemblance to signals in the motion of its trifoliate leaves—the two side ones rising and falling alternately for a time, and then resting. Sometimes many of the leaves are in motion, and sometimes only a few, the greatest activity being in the early morning, and not depending on the wind.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SOME OF ITS RULES AT TIMES LEAD TO RIDICULOUS SITUATIONS.

Members May Not Read Their Speeches, But the Rule Is Very Widely Interpreted Through Copious Notes—Quotations From the Classics Common—A Parliamentary Rush—Kicking Out a Bill—Hear, Hear.

One rule of the British House of Commons not infrequently leads to ridiculous situations. One of the most rigidly enforced, and one over which new members are constantly tripping, is that no member must pass between the Speaker and the member addressing him. If it must be done, the unfortunate individual who desires to make his exit must double himself up and creep under the line of fire somewhat after the manner adopted by King Lewanika when attending service at St. Paul's. That dusky African potentate, finding the sermon rather wearisome, stole softly from the seat and crept on hands and knees out of the sacred edifice, thus compensating his lack of respect for the preacher by a commensurate reverence for the sanctuary.

Stealing His Thunder.

Members are not permitted to read their speeches, but notes are allowed, and these admit of a very elastic interpretation. Sir William Harcourt, in his later years, openly reads page after page, but the effect recalls the comment made on a similar practice of Dr. Chalmers, the greatest pulpit orator of his time, "Man, you was fell reading." The average speech is anything but an artistic production. The usual practice is to write it out and commit it to memory. Lord Rosebery tells an amusing story of a member who had with great care excogitated a speech from which he expected great things in the way of fame. Unfortunately he dropped the precious MSS., which also, unfortunately for him, was picked up by a waggish brother with a phenomenal memory. Spotting at once the nature of the treasure trove, the finder retired to the recess of the library, and soon had it off by heart. Returning to the House, he caught Mr. Speaker's eye before that optic had lit upon the gifted author.

Curious Psychological Study.

He then proceeded, to the delight of a number of friends who were in the know, to deliver the carefully prepared oration, and, said His Lordship, it was a curious psychological study to watch the changing expression on the proper owner's countenance. First he applauded loudly, being delighted to find a speaker agreeing so perfectly with himself, but as he recognized his own handwork, the smile faded imperceptibly into a look of perplexity, which, as doubt became certainty, was transmuted into an expression of intense chagrin and mortification. Another melancholy example of the uncertainty of human affairs, especially on paper. Mr. Gladstone, on the other hand, relied on a few notes only, but his perorations were usually written out more elaborately. His vocabulary was so copious and accessible as to be always at command, and he would proceed without haste and without a stumble through all the mazes of the most intricate subject. Mr. Balfour, too, is at his best in an impromptu reply. Then he often speaks with a felicity of argument and phrase wanting from his more carefully prepared efforts.

Classical Quotations.

A generation ago no set speech in Parliament was considered complete without the embellishment of one or more quotations from the Classics. With the advent of the middle class representative the practice gradually died a natural death. It is said that Lord John Manners, long a Conservative member of the House, once gave forth a trite Latin phrase, and wickedly added that for the benefit of honorable members opposite, he would explain its meaning. The incident would be quite in keeping with the man, who penned the famous couplet:

> "Let law and learning, arts and commerce die,
> But give us still our old nobility."

Mr. Gladstone was the last to make use of a classical quotation in the traditionary way. In his fine speech on the Parliamentary Oaths Bill, of which Charles Bradlaugh was the more immediate occasion, he used with great effect, to those who understood, a passage from Lucretius, the Roman poet-philosopher.

A Parliamentary Rush.

Although practically the House of Commons is the real seat of authority in the state, it still ranks nominally below the House of Lords. Thus at the opening of Parliament, when their Lordships are comfortably settled, and His Majesty on the Throne, a message is despatched for his faithful Commons to attend. Soon a distant sound, as of a rushing torrent, is heard, which increases in volume till there heaves into view a jostling, hustling, pushing, struggling mass of humanity, with the unfortunate Speaker in the van. He, poor man, far from making a decorous, dignified entry befitting his position as first commoner, is urged forward at an ever-increasing speed by the eager crowd behind, and is at last propelled into the centre of the small space deemed sufficient for the accommodation of the Lower House in a generally awry and dishevelled condition. So wild was the rush at the first session of the King's reign that many members suffered both in temper and person, and serious protests were made at the continuance of this antiquated and absurd practice.

A Football Game.

Promises of amendment were made, but likely enough the same football scrum will continue to be played, and will be accepted, just because it has always been so.

Another grievance arises through the arrival of Black Rod at inopportune moments. This official is despatched by the House of Lords when the King's assent is about to be given to bills which have passed both Houses. When he appears in sight the outer door of the House of Commons is closed, in order that, after duly knocking, his message may be delivered in proper form. Then the business in hand has to be suspended, while Mr. Speaker departs to the Upper House to witness the ceremony which on his return he reports to the Commons. It is one of the minor signs of the times that these untimely visits of Black Rod are now keenly resented, and an arrangement had to be made whereby his appearance was restricted to a more convenient hour.

Kicking Out a Bill.

There has been frequent trouble between the Houses about their respective privileges. Edmund Burke was once kept for three hours waiting at the door of the House of Lords with a bill. The Commons felt the indignity so sharply that the next bill sent down by their Lordships for consideration was forthwith rejected nemine contradicente. Mr. Speaker tossed it contemptuously on the floor and honorable members then kicked it down the straight and shot it out between the doorposts. In these more democratic days, there are not a few who would most willingly apply the same expulsive force to the hereditary House itself.

Hear, Hear.

Cheering in the House is also under strict rule, but there are occasions such as the fall of a Government when no bonds can restrain the pent-up feeling. This, however, is exceptional. Members may not clap their hands or tramp the floor, or wave their hats except to catch the Speaker's eye. Neither can they relieve themselves by shouting: "Bravo!" "Hurrah!" or "Go it!" They may cry, "Hear, Hear,"—usually "Yah, Yah,"—as often as they feel inclined, although uninterrupted reiteration becomes obstruction and disorder. "Oh, oh," and "No, no," are permissible. If members are very impatient they may call out: "'Vide, 'vide," or if they think the orator on his legs is wasting time by platitudinizing they may loudly say, "'Greed, 'greed." Pitched battles sometimes occur between a stubborn speaker and angry members. Usually the House prevails, but sometimes it has to give in. The late Professor Fawcett once began a sentence 15 times in response to cries of "'Vide, 'vide," and was at last allowed to complete his remarks.

BLACK MAGIC.

How Hong Kong People Dabble in Some of the Dark Things.

A case was tried at the Hong Kong Magistracy recently which gives a curious insight into the "black art" as practiced by the Chinese. According to The Hong Kong Telegraph the prisoner, Kung Chi Wa, a middle-aged Celestial, was charged with stabbing a compatriot, Ning Kwee, and inflicting grievous bodily harm. On the 2nd inst., complainant was admitted to the Government Civil Hospital suffering from a dangerous stab in the abdomen, the left lobe of the liver being perforated. He was in a critical state when taken in, but was eventually discharged cured. Witness stated that the prisoner called at his house at 2 a.m. on the 2nd. On his opening the door, Kung Chi Wa stabbed him with the weapon produced. Complainant did nothing to provoke this attack, and in fact had never seen the prisoner before. Wang San, wife of the first witness, stated that she was a fortune-teller and practised magic. On the 22nd ult. prisoner's wife called, and, at her request, her horoscope was drawn. She told witness that her husband was a very unlucky man, and was always out of work. Prisoner came to her house on the 2nd inst. He then stated he was a policeman, and that he wished to put to death by magic several people he would designate. Witness, on his departure, went and reported the affair to the police. Later, the prisoner returned and then declared that he was a lukong, and must search the house. When the door was opened he stepped in and stabbed her husband.

Prisoner, in his defence, stated that on the 26th ult. he requested complainant's wife to cure him, as he thought he was a leper. She had given him some magic ointment, of a red color, to put on his face. She then performed some magic rites, and he became mad, and rushed about the streets hitting himself. He felt better since he had been in jail. Prisoner acknowledged that he was not a lukong, and that the knife produced belonged to him. He stabbed complainant because he had not been cured. His Worship said that prisoner had come very near committing murder, and was evidently a very dangerous person. He sent accused to prison for six months, and recommended that he should be examined as to his mental condition by the surgeon of the jail.

Stanley "a Splendid Liar."

One of the funniest stories told by Stanley, which comes in quite apropos just now, is that one day, while conversing with a friendly tribe during his recent travels, one of the chiefs present inquired how many wives he possessed, says the Sheffield (England) Telegraph. Upon Stanley innocently replying that he had none all those present stood up like one man and unanimously exclaimed, "What a splendid liar!" They intensely admired the apparent calmness with which he had, as they thought, tried to pass off on them a wondrous traveler's tale.

Marshal Breze once accidentally killed a relative while both were rabbit hunting and ever afterward would swoon at the sight of a hare.

EGG PRODUCTION.

Pullets for Winter Laying—The Fresh Egg Trade—Breeding for Winter Layers—Exporting Eggs.

For all farmers a most profitable branch of the poultry business is the production of eggs during the winter, says Mr. F. C. Hare, Chief of the Poultry Division, Ottawa. Every winter there is a great demand for new-laid eggs; the supply is always limited, and high prices are paid. In the large cities strictly fresh eggs sold readily during the past winter at from forty to sixty cents per dozen. Some farmers are so situated that they can maintain a city trade in fresh eggs throughout the year. A premium of several cents a dozen can usually be obtained for new-laid eggs shipped weekly to the city merchant.

Market Requirements.—There is a growing preference on the home markets for brown shelled eggs. The shells of the eggs should be wiped clean if necessary, and the eggs graded in size. For shipment to the merchant they should be packed in cases holding 12 dozens or 30 dozens each. Eggs to be palatable should be eaten in a strictly fresh condition; therefore they should reach the consumer without unnecessary delay. This requires (1) that the eggs be collected regularly every day and stored in a cool room (temperature 40 to 50 deg. F.), until a sufficient number are on hand to deliver to a dealer; (2) that the dealer forward the eggs to the merchant at least once a week, and (3) that the merchant protect the eggs from deterioration while in his possession.

Pullets for Winter Laying.—As a general rule pullets hatched during May or June will prove most profitable for winter laying. Farmers who expect to make a specialty of high-priced new-laid eggs next winter should at the present time be hatching out a good number of chicks from which to select suitable pullets. The cockerels should be sold in the early fall. Unless they are housed in the fields and require little attention of extra feed, the most profitable age for marketing is four months. After that age the cost of feed per pound of gain in live weight rapidly increases.

PAIR OF WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

The pullets should be comfortably and permanently housed in the fall; transferring mature pullets to a strange pen defers egg-production. Early winter laying demands liberal feeding, which include in addition to the grain, waste meat or animal food, and vegetable food. From two flocks of Barred Plymouth Rock pullets that were liberally fed from birth for early maturity at the Bondville, Que., Illustration Station, eggs were gathered daily after the pullets were four months and one week old. Experiments at the Utah Experiment Station showed that the profit from young hens or pullets was about five times greater than that from hens three to four years old. Not only did the old hens lay considerably fewer eggs, but the eggs were worth less per dozen. This is accounted for by the fact that the pullets laid a larger proportion of their eggs in winter, when the price was good.

Breeding for Winter Layers.—When the pullets are forced for winter egg production, there should be kept in addition another breeding pen of selected fowls from which to rear the chicks. A hen or pullet that commences to lay in the spring will at that time produce stronger-germed eggs for hatching than will another that has had her vitality impaired by winter laying.

The farmer should select from the flock of pullets ten or twelve of the best winter layers, placing a regular leg band or a piece of wire around the leg of each. The next winter these pullets, (then yearling hens) should be separated from the laying hens and kept in good health and medium flesh but not fed for winter laying. In February or March they should be mated with a suitable cockerel, and their rations increased so as to bring them into laying at the time when their eggs are required for hatching. Such a process of selection would soon produce a particularly fine strain of winter layers.

Exporting Eggs.—The export trade carries off the surplus eggs produced during the summer months when prices are low, but has little or no effect on the price of new-laid eggs in winter. Efforts to increase our export trade in eggs need not, therefore, alarm consumers in cities or towns. Eggs that are placed in cold storage from April till July are shipped to Great Britain for the September and October trade; those that go into cold storage in the fall are exported during the winter months. All these are sold in Britain as "Canadian fresh eggs."

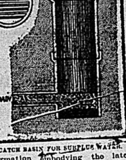
The Tall Growing Nasturtiums.

For quick effect before permanent climbers are available, as in covering the foundation walls of a house or the lattices beneath piazzas, the tall growing varieties of nasturtiums prove exceedingly satisfactory. They afford the handsomest of color effects with their brilliant bloom and clean, attractive foliage, and few things are easier to grow or less particular as to soil.

DETAILS OF DRAINAGE.

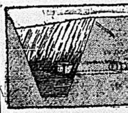
Catch Basins for Surplus Water—Protection of Outlets—Designed to Serve Two Important Purposes.

The growing movement towards the reclamation of waste, marshy lands and the improvement of wet lands by drainage gives value to all details on the subject. There seems to be an increasing desire among farmers for knowledge in regard to draining land, and in response to it the office of experiment stations has issued in Farmers' Bulletin 187 some information embodying the latest science and up to date practice along this line. In discussing the proper use and management of catch basins and the protection of drain outlets it is advised that surface water be excluded from the drains unless sufficient provision is made for conveying it into them in such a way that dirt, sand and rubbish will be prevented from entering. This may be done by the use of catch basins constructed of two lengths of sewer pipe set in a vertical position and covered by an iron grating (A), to prevent rubbish entering the drain. This grate may be covered with a pile of bricks or small stones (B) to act as a coarse filter and prevent the clogging of the grate. The bricks or stones may be rearranged and the silt removed from the bottom of the basin occasionally, so that with proper care such an arrangement will serve an excellent purpose for removing surface water from places where it cannot pass through the soil with sufficient readiness and at the same time do no injury to the drain. Such basins should not be connected with drains of less diameter than six inches. Under the conditions which make it desirable to use them the surface water will be received and pass away before the soil water reaches the drain.



CATCH BASIN FOR SURPLUS WATER.

While a substantial stone or brick bulkhead at the outlet of each main drain when well made has a permanent and workmanlike appearance, it is expensive and in many localities impracticable to use because of the lack of proper material. One of the most common as well as most efficient protections is the plank box with wire bars placed vertically across the end about two inches apart. Such a box should be made of two inch plank twelve feet long and large enough to admit of the insertion of the tile into the upstream end. It should be laid correctly, and more than ordinary care should be taken in tamping the earth securely about it. In fact, the entire filling should be well tamped from bottom to top. A protection of this kind serves two purposes—it prevents small animals from entering the drain, which they are most likely to do when no water is flowing from it, and obviates the necessity of using vitrified tile at the outlet, which it is wise to do, for the reason that red tiles usually scale when exposed to the weather under such conditions.



OUTLET PROTECTION FOR DRAINS.

Thinning Sugar Beets.

About the time that the beets show the fourth leaf, the bunching and thinning process begins. This is necessary to remove the excess of plants. Single plants should be left in the row from 6 to 10 inches apart, depending on the distance between the rows and the kind of soil. The time of thinning is important. If the proper amount of seed has been used there will be a considerable excess of plants, due to the nearness of the seeds to one another. A still further excess results from the fact that each particular seed contains from one to six germs, all of which are liable to germinate.

Sheep for Mutton.

Mutton as a human food is gaining rapidly in reputation. So much improvement has been made in the methods of breeding, fattening, slaughtering and ripening mutton that a great army of people who were once prejudiced against it no longer find anything the matter with it. Good authorities predict that the time is rapidly approaching when as many sheep and lambs will be slaughtered in Canada as there are hogs and cattle slaughtered now. History shows us that in old countries mutton is the poor man's meat.

The Prolific Scale.

The total number of descendants from one individual of the San Jose scale during the time between the middle of June and the last of November has been calculated at 3,216,080,400. As all these millions obtain their food by sucking the sap from the plant they are on it is not to be wondered at that a tree which in the spring was apparently in good condition may be nearly or entirely dead by fall.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

KILLED IN A COLLISION

Seventeen Dead and About One Hundred Injured.

Regular New York Passenger Train Crashes Into An Excursion Train Which Had Stopped—Engine Tore Through Rear Car the Greater Part of Its Length—Tower Operator Lowered the Signal Too Soon.

New York, July 11.—Seventeen persons were killed and about 100 were injured in a collision which occurred at Midvale, N.J., just before noon yesterday, when a regular passenger train on the Greenwood Lake branch of the Erie Railroad ran into an excursion train which had stopped to take water. All of the dead and injured lived in Hoboken, Jersey City and New York.

The accident is believed to have resulted from a tower operator having lowered his signal too soon, and this was admitted by D. W. Cooke, general passenger agent of the Erie Railroad, who gave out a statement in which he said: "The operator in the tower failed to set the block signal against the train following."

The train which was run into was a special carrying members of the First Plattdeucher Association of Hoboken on their annual outing, and had 800 passengers. The train consisted of twelve cars and two engines. The first engine had taken water and the train had moved up and stopped with the second engine beside the tank when the regular train drew near.

The flagman on the special signalled the engineer of the oncoming train, but owing to a curve in the road his flag was not seen until too late. It is claimed that the engineer of the regular train had slowed down to about ten miles an hour before he crashed into the special, but his engine tore through the rear car the greater part of its length and drove the forward end of that car into the car ahead. The killed and injured were in these two cars.

Excursion Train Wrecked.

St. Louis, Mo., July 11.—An excursion train on the Missouri Pacific was wrecked at Labadie, 45 miles west, last night by jumping the track. Three cars rolled down an embankment. No one was killed, but 38 persons were injured.

Thomas Storey Killed.

Winnipeg, July 11.—While walking in the C.P.R. yards on Friday afternoon, Thos. Storey, formerly of Smith's Falls, Ont., was struck by a yard engine and instantly killed. Deceased was on his way to see a new plastering machine at work. He was a prominent resident of Wawanesa, where two brothers reside. His father lives at Smith's Falls.

Found Dead.

Chatham, July 11.—The body of a young man, apparently about 25 years of age, was found on the G.T.R. tracks yesterday morning east of here by trainmen in a very badly mangled condition. Deceased had nothing in his clothes to identify him by. He had 85 cents in his pockets. From appearances, he was evidently a workman with the Forepaugh & Sells Bros. shows.

Barn Raising Accident.

Galt, July 11.—A serious, if not fatal, accident happened at a barn raising at Herbert Schlieter's farm, about two and a half miles east of Washington, on Thursday evening. At 8 o'clock the work was well on toward completion when a brace fell from the top of the framework. James Deans was standing on the ground below and was struck on the temple. The young man was rendered unconscious. He is in a precarious condition.

HIGH DIVER MEETS DEATH.

Son of An English Admiral Who Retired in 1881.

Tacoma, July 11.—Patrick Mardon lost his life while making a 75-foot dive from a bridge at Hoquiam. He fell into the water on his back. He was quickly picked up, but died in the hospital an hour later. Mardon's father, who was in the English navy, retired in 1881 with the rank of admiral. He is still alive and prominently connected with The London Daily Mail, The Freeman's Journal and the Harmsworth publications. The deceased was educated for the royal navy at the Woolwich Royal Navy Academy, where he graduated, serving as an officer on various ships until he resigned. It was his intention to have returned home this fall. The body will be buried at Hoquiam.

Jumped From 9th Storey.

New York, July 11.—Miss Bertha Dolber, 25 years old, of San Francisco, said to have been the daughter of the late S. F. Dolber, millionaire, jumped from a ninth-storey window of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Nearly every bone in her body was broken. Since her father's death a year ago, Miss Dolber has suffered with melancholia.

Imagination Killed Him.

Asbury Park, N. J., July 11.—A victim of his own imagination, James Henratty, a fisherman, is dead here, after drinking whisky which he thought was poison. He was just recovering from a long drinking bout, and Saturday night took a drink, to steady himself, from a bottle kept in a dark closet. Shortly afterward Henratty was seized with the conviction that he had taken poison. Terror gripped him, and he fell writhing in convulsions. He was dead when a doctor reached him. A post-mortem examination yesterday showed no trace of poison, and the remainder of the whisky was found to be pure.

Dr. Doughty Archivist.

Ottawa, July 11.—The appointment of Dr. Arthur George Doughty of Quebec to be Dominion archivist, is announced. It was made by Order-in-Council, passed May 16.

REORGANIZED "SOO" POLICY.

Economy the Watchword As Outlined By the Directors.

Sault Ste. Marie, July 11.—C. D. Warren will be president and have absolute control of the policy of the company, which will be most conservative. His office will be in Toronto.

He will be assisted by the board of directors. Cornelius Shields will be general manager of the company, and is instructed to begin operations in all the plants as soon as practical.

All the plant will be operated as soon as possible, and is now being put into condition for operation.

We have all our old contracts, and have more new ones within the last three days, which will be sufficient to operate the plant for years. D. D. Lewis will be superintendent of the plant as formerly. We have sufficient ore, pig iron, coal and coke already on hand to begin operations at once, and more will be contracted for immediately. All operations will begin on the Michigan side very shortly.

The above is the substance of information given by the directors of the Lake Superior Corporation, after concluding business, which has kept them in the Soo a week previous to departure for the east Saturday.

The policy of the company will be conservative, and its intention is to operate all its plant which can be made to earn money and no more.

A FISHING DISPUTE.

Canadian Government Cruiser Ordered to Mecatma Islands.

Ottawa, July 11.—The Government fisheries cruiser La Canadienne has been sent to Mecatma Islands, on the Labrador coast, to assert the authority of the Dominion over the fisheries there. It appears that a dispute has arisen between the Federal authority and the Provincial Government of Quebec in regard to the issuance of a fishing license to a Nova Scotia firm. The Dominion cruiser will see that the rights of the Dominion are maintained.

From a Canadian.

London, July 11.—(C.A.P.)—The Minister of external affairs of Australia has sent all the state premiers a copy of the letter from a Canadian as an indication of the desire of many Canadians to settle in Australia, where, the letter says, the settlement condition is higher than in the Dominion.

The Name California.

The word California was first used in a work on Spanish chivalry published in 1510. This work was an alleged history of the adventures of "Amadis of Gaul and his son Esplandiam." It was of great length and divided into a great number of short stories, one of which was the manner in which "Califia, the queen of the island of California, a country inhabited only by women, who lived as amazons and had gold without end," saved Constantinople from an attack by the Persians. This story as well as others was widely read by the people of Spain and by many regarded as fact. Among the stanch believers were the members of the Cortes expedition, who upon landing upon the peninsula of Lower California imagined that they were on an island, which owing to its apparent riches they named after the fabled isle, and Cortes himself called the new country "California."

A Valuable Tooth.

William Archer in the Fortnightly Review, tells an amusing story of the economy practiced and necessary in the early days of the Norwegian theater at Bergen. It was in 1849, when Ibsen and Bjornson were creating the national drama. A lady had been engaged for the part of "second old woman" when it was discovered that her elocutionary powers were impaired by the fact that she had lost one of her front teeth. Impoverished as she was, the management came to the rescue and bore the expense of the necessary dentistry. When she retired, however, after two seasons, she had to leave the tooth behind her, the example of the dentist's art being the property of the theater. The management was too poor to part with it!

The Eye of a Pianist.

A pianist has to cultivate the eye so as to see 1,500 signs in one minute, the fingers to make 2,000 movements and the brain to understand all these signs as well as direct all these movements. In playing Weber's "Moto Perpetuo" a pianist has to read 4,541 notes in less than four minutes, or about nineteen a second, but the eye can receive only about ten consecutive impressions a second, so that in quick music it seems that a player does not see every note singly, but in groups, probably a bar or more at one view.

An Extraordinary Memory.

At the Giessen congress on psychology Professor Mueller of Goettingen told of a certain Dr. K. who within a few seconds was able to work out the square of any number of five figures given to him. He was also able to learn by heart and repeat a row of figures 204 in number within twelve and a half minutes. Professor Mueller asserted that no such memory for figures had ever been known, the record having been 204 figures in seventy-five minutes.

Onion Sandwiches.

Onions eaten raw, with bread and butter, make a capital complexion clearer and nightcap, especially for the nervous person, inclined to lie awake o' nights and to wake up dishearteningly early in the morning. Slice the onions thin and sprinkle lightly with salt to take off the raw, crude taste, and have the bread thin and a good deal of butter.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) T. S. McINTEE.

Uncle Terry

....By....

CHARLES CLARK MUNN

Copyright, 1900, by LEE & SHEPARD

"The fact on't is," replied Uncle Terry, removing his hat and laying it on the floor beside him, "I've allus pulled my own boat in this world, an' it sorter goes agin the grain now to h'ist the oars over to 'nother fellow." Then, reaching into his pocket, drawing out a letter and handing it to Albert, he added: "'Bout two weeks ago I got this 'ere from that thief Frye. I was 'spectin' the gov'ment boat 'long most every day an' so couldn't cum any sooner."

Albert read the letter and gave a low whistle. "Frye must have been either very hard up when he wrote," he said, "or else the other parties are crowding him, and this is his last effort to fleece you. I have heard that he has been speculating in wheat lately, and it may be he has got caught. I hope so, so it will be easier for us to bring him to terms. I have my plans all mapped out, and I think we had best go for him at once while he is likely to be in his office." Then, calling to Frank and rapidly writing a check for $500 while that surprised young man was shaking hands with Uncle Terry, he continued: "Please go up to the station, Frank, and get an officer at once and step into the Maverick bank on your way back and get this check cashed. We will go prepared for the worst."

When Frank had gone Uncle Terry said: "There wa'n't no need o' yer gettin' money, Mr. Page. I've brung three hundred, which is all he asked fer."

"We may need more nevertheless," answered Albert, "and as I wish to make but one visit to Frye's office, it's best to go prepared." Then after filling out a writ of replevin he added: "Excuse me a moment, Mr. Terry. I will be back soon."

He was absent perhaps five minutes, and then Uncle Terry was astonished to see a strange man enter from an inner room. He wore a full black beard, smoked glasses, broad slouch hat and a clerical coat which was buttoned close to his chin. Uncle Terry looked at him in surprise, waiting for the stranger to speak.

"Don't you know me, Uncle Terry?" said the new arrival.

"By gosh, it's you, Mr. Page," exclaimed the old man, "or else I'm tuck with a change o' heart!" Then he added, with a laugh, "I'd never known ye 'cept fer yer voice."

"I'm all right, then, I guess," said Albert, "and now for my plan. When the officer comes we four will go at once to Frye's office. You will go in alone and open matters. Contrive to leave the door ajar, and when you get to talking the rest of us will creep up and listen. And here is where your wits must work well. Act as though you did not suspect anything wrong, but tell him you are discouraged and have put out all the money you can; also that you are poor and can't afford to waste any more on what you believe to be a hopeless case. Then ask him to return you the trinkets you gave him, as the girl values them highly; and right here is where you must contrive to get Frye to admit he has these trinkets. Most likely he will refuse to give them up until his fee is paid, and he may ask quite a sum. If you can settle the matter by paying him one or two hundred dollars I should advise it, but not more. If it comes to his refusal we will walk in at that point, and the officer will serve the writ. We can search his premises and even make him open his safe, and if we find what we want we will take it."

When Frank and the officer returned and the former had also donned a disguise, the four proceeded to Frye's office. It was early, and none of the other occupants on that floor had arrived. Uncle Terry knocked at Frye's door, but no one answered. He knocked again; still no answer. He tried the door; it was locked. Then he knocked harder; no reply. Then he stepped back to where the others were waiting. "Thar's nobody in thar," he whispered, "or, if thar is, he's asleep." Albert went forward and listened. There was no sound. Then he stooped and tried to look through the keyhole; it was plugged.

"I smell gas coming out of the keyhole," he whispered to the officer. "You go and try it."

The officer did so. Then he took out a pocketknife and thrust the blade through the keyhole and peeped in. Then he beckoned to Albert.

"Something's wrong in there, Mr. Page," he said. "I can see a man's legs, and the gas is coming out of that keyhole enough to choke you. We'd best call the janitor."

That official was found, and he, too, peeped.

"Don't you know me, Uncle Terry?"

"I noticed a light in Frye's office when I retired last night," he said. "Depend upon it, there is something wrong." Then, turning to the officer, he added, "You are an officer of the law, and as I am in charge of this building I give you permission to open Frye's door on the score of public safety."

Grasping the knob, the officer threw his weight against the door, and it gave way. A cry of surprise escaped him. Frye was sitting in his chair, with head thrown back, staring at the ceiling and with mouth and eyes wide open. The room was stifling with gas, and the officer opened the window. In doing so he noticed the two stopcocks were opened, and he turned them off. Then he returned to the hall. When the room was fit to breathe in again all four entered, and the officer laid his hand upon Frye's face.

"Dead!" he exclaimed.

Albert noticed an envelope on Frye's desk directed to Silas Terry. He quietly put it in his pocket and joined with the rest in a search of the room.

"It looks like a case of suicide," observed the officer—"door locked, keyhole and cracks plugged, window shut and two gas burners open; safe unlocked and wide open, and here's a till with money in it!"

And then he added, "In the name of the law I must close the door and notify a coroner."

When Albert, with Uncle Terry and Frank, reached the office he drew the letter he had taken from Frye's desk out of his pocket and handed it to Uncle Terry. "It was directed to you," he said, "and I thought best to bring it away."

When the old man opened it he exclaimed: "By the great eternal jumpin' Jehosaphat, if here ain't the hull o' the things we want so bad, an' a letter to some furriners! Here, you read it, Mr. Page. The writin's wussen crow tracks in the mud."

The letter was as follows:

> Messrs. Thygeson & Co., Stockholm:
> Gentlemen—I have good and sufficient reason to believe an heir to the estate in your hands exists in the person of a young woman now living with one Silas Terry, a lighthouse keeper on Southport island, Maine, and known as Telly Terry. This person, when a babe, was saved from a wreck by this man Terry and by him cared for and brought up. A report of the wreck and the saving of one life (the child's) was made at the time by this man Terry and is now on file in Washington. As I am going away on a long journey, I turn this matter over to you for further investigation, and subscribe myself, respectfully yours,
> NICHOLAS FRYE.

When Albert had finished reading the letter aloud he grasped Uncle Terry's hand and exclaimed, "Take those valuables back with you, but leave me the letter, and I will attend to the rest!" Then he added, "You are my guest as long as you can stay in Boston."

When, two days later, Uncle Terry was ready to depart Albert handed him a large package containing a silk dress pattern for Aunt Lissy, a woolen one for Mrs. Leach and a complete artist's outfit for Telly. "With these things," he said, "go my best regards for those they are for, and among them are the photographs of two sketches I made when I was with you that I want you to ask Miss Telly to paint for me."

When Telly opened her package she found two sketches of herself, one leaning against a rock with her face resting on her hand, the other sitting beside a flower decked boat with a broad sun hat in her lap.

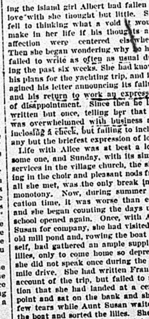
CHAPTER XXXII.

IN a letter which Frank wrote to Alice soon after his return to Boston he said: "My mother and, in fact, all my people seem to think so much more of me since I have set about fitting myself for a profession. Father says he is growing proud of me, and that pleases me best of all, for he is and always has been my best friend. Of course I think the world of Blanch, and she seems to think I am the best fellow in the world. Little do any of them know that it is you for whom I am working, and always with the hope that you will deem me worthy of the prize. How many times I recall every moment of that one short hour on the old mill pond and all that made it sacred to me no one can tell. I go out little except to escort mother and the girls to the theater once in awhile, and so anxious am I to be able to pass an examination I often go to the office and read law till midnight."

When this effusion reached Alice the mountains around Sandgate were just putting on their autumn glory of color, and that night when she sat on the porch and heard the katydids in the fast thinning foliage of the elms she had what she called an old fashioned fit of the blues. And how lonely it was there too!

Aunt Susan, never a talkative person, sat close, but as dumb as a graven image; no house near and only the twinkling lights of several on the other side of the valley were visible. On a knoll just below them she knew were a few score of white headstones, among them her mother's, and when there was a moon she could see them plainly. It is during the lonely hours of our lives that we see ourselves best, and this quiet evening—no more quiet than many others perhaps, but seemingly so to Alice—she saw herself and her possible future as it seemed to be. Every word of her lover's letter had been an emissary of both joy and sorrow—joy that he was so devoted to her and sorrow because she felt that an impassable barrier separated them. "He will forget me in a few months," she said to herself, "and by the time he has won his coveted law degree his scheming mother will have some eligible girl all ready for him to fall in love with. As for me, she will never have the chance to frown at me, for even if Blanch begs, I would never set foot in her house." When her feelings had carried her up to this point she arose and, going into the parlor, began playing. Her piano was the best and about the only companion she had and quickly responded to her moods. And now what did it tell? She played, but every chord was a minor one, full of the pathos of tears and sorrow. She sang, but every song that came to her lips carried the same refrain and told only of hungry hearts and unanswered love. And last, and worst of all, almost insensibly her fingers strayed to the chords of one well remembered song. One verse only she sang, and when the last pathetic line was ended she arose and, going to her aunt and kneeling, bowed her head in that good old soul's lap and burst into tears. It did not last long, however, and when the storm was over she arose and said:

"There, auntie; I've been spoiling for a good cry all day, and now I've had it and feel better."



She bowed her head.

She thought of her brother, toward whom her heart had always turned when in trouble, and not in vain. Of the jest that Frank had made regarding the island girl Albert had fallen in love with she thought but little. She fell to thinking what a void it would make in her life if his thoughts and affection were centered elsewhere. Then she began wondering why he had failed to write as often as usual during the past six weeks. She had known his plans for the yachting trip, and imagined his letter announcing its failure and his return to work an expression of disappointment. Since then he had written but once, telling her that he was overwhelmed with business and inclosing a check, but failing to inclose any but the briefest expression of love.

Life with Alice was at best a lonesome one, and Sunday, with its simple services in the village church, the singing in the choir and pleasant nods from all she met, was the only break in its monotony. Now, during summer vacation time, it was worse than ever, and she began counting the days until school opened again. Once, with Aunt Susan for company, she had visited the old mill pond and, rowing the boat herself, had gathered an ample supply of lilies, only to come home so depressed she did not speak once during the four mile drive. She had written Frank an account of the trip, but failed to mention that she had landed at a certain point and sat on the bank and shed a few tears while Aunt Susan waited in the boat and sorted the lilies. She had inclosed a wee little lily bud in this letter, but not a word by which he could infer that her heart was very hungry for—some one.

But all things and all series of days, be they filled with joy or sorrow, come to an end, and so did the lonely vacation days of Alice. When the school gathered once more and the daily round of simple recitations began, she realized as never before how blessed a thing it is in this world that we can have occupation.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A WEEK after Uncle Terry's return from Boston he asked Telly to go with him on his daily drive to the head of the island. He had described the exciting incidents of his trip both to his wife and Telly, and, feeling obliged to do so, had told them that Mr. Page had taken charge of the case and would communicate with him when anything definite was learned. Telly had seemed unusually cheerful ever since, and more affectionate, and had at once set about painting the two sketches Albert had sent.

"The leaves is turnin' purty fast," he said to her that day, "an' I thought mebbe ye'd like ter go with me an' take a look at 'em. They won't last long."

When the two had jogged along in almost silence for a few miles Uncle Terry said, pointing to a small rock by the roadside, "Thar's whar I fust found Mr. Page, Telly."

He watched her face closely as he spoke and noted the look of interest that came.

"I told him that day," he continued, chuckling, "that lawyers was mostly all thieves, an' the fact that he didn't take it amiss went fur to convince me he was an exception. It's a bit bird as allus flutters. From what he's done an' the way he behaves, I'm thinkin' more an' more o' him the better I know him, an' I believe him now to be as honest an' square a young man as I ever met."

Uncle Terry was silent a few moments while he flicked at the daisies with his whip as they rode along.

"Ye've had a couple o' letters from him sense he went back, hain't ye?" he asked finally. "I noticed they was in his writin'." He saw a faint color come to her cheeks.

"Yes, he wrote me he was finishing a couple of sketches he made here, and wanted to have me paint them for him. They are the ones I am working on now."

"That's all right, Telly," continued Uncle Terry briskly. "I'm glad ye're doin' it fer him, fer he's doin' a good deal fer us."

Nothing further was said on the subject until they were on their way back from the head of the island. The sun was getting low, the sea winds that rustled among the scarlet leaved oaks or murmured through the spruce thickets had almost fallen away, and just as they came to an opening where the broad ocean was visible he said:

"Did ye ever stop ter think, Telly, that Lissy an' me is gittin' purty well 'long in years? I'm over seventy now, an' in common course o' things I won't be here many years longer."

"What makes you speak like that, father? Do you want to make me blue?"

"Oh, I didn't mean it that way, Telly, only I was thinkin' how fast the years go by. The leaves turnin' allus makes me think on't. It seems no time sense they fust came out, an' now they're goin' ag'in! It don't seem more'n two or three years sense ye was a little baby a-pullin' my fingers an' callin' me dada, an' now yer a woman grown. It won't be long afore yer a-sayin' 'yes' to some man as wants ye, an' a-goin' to a home o' yer own."

"So that is what you are thinking of, father, is it? And you are imagining that some one of the name of Page is likely to take me away from you, who are and always have been all there is in life for me."

She paused, and two tears trembled on her long lashes, to be quickly brushed away. "Please do not think me so ungrateful," she continued, "as to let any man coax me away from you, for no man can. Here I was cast ashore, here I've found a home and love, and here I shall stay as long as you and mother live, and when you two are gone I want to go too." She swallowed a lump that rose in her throat and then continued: "As for this legacy that you have worried about so much, and I am sure has cost you a good deal, it is yours, every penny of it, and whether it is big or little, you are to keep and use it as you need if you love me. You haven't been yourself for six months, father, and all for this trouble. I have watched you more than you think, and wished many times you had never heard of it."

When she ceased Uncle Terry looked at her a moment, suddenly dropped the reins and putting both arms around her held her for a moment and kissed her. He had not kissed her for many years.

"I hain't bin thinkin' 'bout myself in this matter," he observed as he picked up the reins again and chirruped to the old horse, "an' only am wantin' ter see ye provided fer, Telly. As fer Mr. Page or any other man, every woman needs a purtector in this world, an' when the right 'un comes along don't let yer feelin's or sense o' duty stand in the way o' havin' a home o' yer own."

"But you are not anxious to be rid of me, are you, father?"

"Ye won't think that o' me," he replied as they rattled down the sharp inclines into the village.

She noticed after that that he wanted her with him oftener than ever.

Later, when another letter came for her in a hand that he recognized, he handed it to her with a smile and immediately left her alone to read it.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE halcyon days of autumn had come, when one day Albert packed a valise and boarded the early morning train for Maine. An insidious longing to see the girl that had been in his thoughts for four months had come to him, and week by week increased until it had overcome business demands. Then he had a little good news from Stockholm, which, as he said to himself, would serve as an excuse. He had told Frank what his errand was to Uncle Terry, and to say to any that called that he would return in two days. Of his reception by Telly he was a good deal in doubt. She had written to him in reply to his letters, but between each of the simple, unaffected lines all he could read was an undertone of sadness. That, with a vivid recollection of what Uncle Terry had disclosed, led him to believe there was some burden on her mind.

When he grasped Uncle Terry's hand at the boat landing that old man's face fairly beamed.

"I'm right glad ter see ye," he said, "an' so 'll the folks be. Thar ain't much' goin' on at the Cape any time, an' sence ye wur thar it seems wussen ever."

"I thought I'd run down and stay a night or so with you," said Albert, "and tell you what I've learned about the legacy."

Uncle Terry's face brightened. "Hev ye got good news?" he asked.

"In a way, yes," replied Albert. "This firm of Thygeson & Co. write expressing surprise that Frye should have given up the case after they had paid him over $500, and ask that I file a bond with the Swedish consul in Washington before they submit a statement of the case and inventory of the estate to us. It is only a legal formality, and I have complied with it."

"They must 'a' got skeery o' lawyers frum dealin' with that thief Frye," put in Uncle Terry, "an' I don't blame 'em. Did ye l'arn the real cause o' his suicidin'?"

"Wheat speculation," answered Albert. "He dropped over $60,000 in three weeks, and it broke his miserly heart. I never want to see such a sight again in my life as his face was that morning. It haunted me for a week after."

When Uncle Terry's home was reached Albert found a most cordial reception awaiting him from Aunt Lissy, and, what pleased him far more, a warmly welcoming smile from Telly.

"I'm sorry we didn't know ye were comin'," said Aunt Lissy, "so we could be better prepared for company."

"I wish you wouldn't consider me company," replied Albert. "Just think I am one of the family, and let it go at that."

The long ride in the crisp sea air following the scanty railroad lunch had given him a most amazing appetite, and the bountiful supper of stewed chicken and cold lobster, not to mention other good things of Aunt Lissy's providing, received a hearty acceptance. Although it was dark when supper was over, he could not resist going out on the rocks and listening a few minutes to the waves as they beat upon them.

When he returned to the house Albert found a bright fire burning in the sitting room.

"I put yer things in yer room," said Uncle Terry, and, handing him a lamp, he added, "ye know whar 'tis now, I hope; so make yerself t' hum."

Later, when they were all gathered about the fire, both the "wimmin folks" with their sewing and Uncle Terry enjoying one of the cigars Albert had brought him, the old man's face gleamed as genial as the firelight. He told stories of the sea, of storm and shipwreck and curious experiences that had come to him during the many years he had dwelt beside the ocean, and while Albert listened, stealing occasional glances at the sweet faced girl whose eyes were bent upon her sewing, the neighboring waves kept up their monotone, and the fire sparkled and glowed with a ruddy light.

"Don't you ever get tired of hearing the waves beat so near you?" asked Albert at last.

"Waal, there's suthin' curious 'bout that," answered Uncle Terry. "I've got so uster 'em they seem sorter necessary ter livin', an' when I go 'way it's hard fer me ter sleep fer missin' 'em. Why, don't yer like ter hear 'em?"

"Oh, yes; I enjoy them always, and they are a lullaby that puts me to sleep at once."

It was but little past 9 when Uncle Terry arose and, bringing in a basket of wood, observed, "I guess I'll turn in middlin' 'arly so's to git up 'arly an' pull my traps 'fore breakfast, an' then I'll take ye out fishin'. The mackerel's bitin' good these days, an' mebbe ye'll enjoy it."

Aunt Lissy soon followed, and Albert was left alone with Telly. It looked intentional. For a few moments he watched her, still intent on her work.

"Have you finished my sketches?" he said finally.

"Not quite," she replied. "I had to go up to the cove to work on one in order to satisfy myself, and a good many days it was too rough to row up there, so that hindered me. I have that one finished, though, and the other almost."

Was it possible that this girl had rowed four miles every day in order to paint from the original scene of his sketch?

"May I see the finished one?" he asked.

She brought it. Not only was the picture of herself sitting in the shade of a low spruce reproduced, but the fern decorated boat near by, the quiet little cove in front and a view of ocean beyond.

It was a charming picture.

"There is only one thing lacking," she said shyly as he held it at an angle so the firelight would shine upon it, "and I didn't dare put that in without your consent."

"I do not notice anything left out as I recall the spot."

"But there is," she replied, "and one that should be there to make the picture correct. Can't you guess?"

He looked at Telly's face, upon which a roguish smile had come.

"No, I can't guess. Tell me what is lacking?"

"Yourself," she replied.

"But I do not want the picture to remind me of myself. I wanted it so I could see you and recall the day we were there." She made no reply, and he laid it on the table and asked for the other one. It was all done except the finishing touches, but it did not seem to be a reproduction of his original sketch at the cove.

"I took the liberty of changing it a little," she said as he was looking at

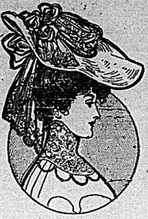
FOR STREET WEAR.

Fashions In Motor Coats—Shirt Waist Suits as Popular as Ever.

For automobile and outing wear coats of mohair and shantung are the favorite materials. They are admirably suited for shedding dust. The mohairs have never before been manufactured in such silky materials as this year. The shantungs are heavier than last, and the favorite shades are ash gray, damson blue and willow green. The coat of natural colored silk, however, trimmed with black gold and cream braid, has a very smart appearance.



A CARRIAGE HAT.

Both black and brown taffeta coats are also being turned out for the same purpose.

The latest development of the sleeve frill is the employment of fine lace frills dyed to the exact shade of the gown. Chiffon is also largely used for sleeve frills.

Shirt waist suits will be more popular than ever, and these little one color costumes are infinitely more becoming than the light waist and dark skirt to the woman who is at all inclined to stoutness.

The boat shape turban is again with us and is sure to have many admirers, as it lends itself so admirably to the shaded petal trimming. Rose petals of silk or velvet are particularly effective.

In the picture we have a dainty hat most suitable for carriage wear. It is of horsehair straw, draped with lace and a bunch of pink roses.

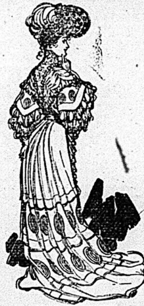
HINTS ON ECONOMY.

Last Year's Dresses Can Be Renovated—The Season's Tailor Made.

There is quite a pronounced fancy for simple gauze and muslin frocks for evening wear.

Renovations this season are not hard to make. The principal difficulty comes in the skirts, which require more fullness, and often this may be obtained by the addition of a front panel of embroidery, the same material being used to make the sleeves fuller. Sleeves are often plain to the elbow, where they blossom out into many long frills of lace or accordion plaited chiffon. Wide collars of lace and embroidery cover a multitude of sins, not to speak of the ever present fichu. Skirts may be freshened up by the addition of ribbon ruching put on in a conventional design.



CREAM VEILING GOWN.

The tailor made frock is likely to prove the most expensive of the entire wardrobe, for it cannot even be partially made at home. The woman who cannot afford to invest much money in hers had better buy it ready made in some good shop.

It is no wonder the best tailor mades are expensive; they show such perfection of cut and such dainty touches in the way of handmade trimmings.

Lace stoles are mounted on chiffon and taffeta and make dainty neck pieces with which to replace the old fashioned boa. Chiffon, crepe de chine and mousseline are made up in dainty fashion with gauged centers of contrasting material. Ribbon is shirred and combined with chiffon and lace to form chic cape effects.

Pongee this season comes dyed in a variety of shades, including gray, a royal blue and a rich brown. It makes pretty coat and skirt costumes and shirt waist costume dresses, and it wears well.

The picture represents a gown of cream veiling trimmed with flat tucks and circles formed of galloon.

CHARACTER MAKING.

The Home the Genuine Life School of Moral Training.

Character is catching—provided one who has it to give can get close enough to the one who is to take it. The reason the school cannot do the whole or the chief part of moral training is that even in the best schools and with the best teachers the children have to be handled so largely in masses and at arm's length. In the home the parent lives close to the individual child all the time, and whatever the parent has in the way of character to give the child is pretty sure to take without knowing when or how or even being aware of what is going on, until days, weeks, months, perhaps years after, he breaks out with just such feelings, tones, tempers, looks, words and deeds as he had been catching all the while.

The child learns his moral principles by induction from concrete cases in his own experience and observation. A principle that does not rest on some such case makes about as much impression on a child as a drop of water on a duck's back. The example of the parent is the most potent moral influence over the character and conduct of the child. The kindness, the justice, the temperance, the purity, the charity, the patience, the courage, the foresight, the wisdom, that the child sees exemplified in the life of the father and mother he will tend to incorporate into his own life.

Of course the opposite qualities are equally contagious—unkindness, uncharitableness, impatience, foolishness and the like. What shall the parent do who not infrequently is guilty of these odious things and gets detected in them by the child's discerning eyes? There is only one thing to do.

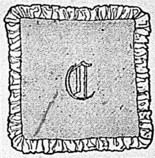
A great many people confess their sins in a lump to God on Sunday who cannot bring themselves to frankly acknowledge a fault to their own children as soon as they recognize it has been committed. The most sympathetic influence over a child can be gained on no less searching terms.

An obvious corollary from all this is the fearful blunder which busy and preoccupied parents make who turn their children over to governesses and servants at the most impressionable period of their lives and never get near enough to the child's life to influence him one way or the other.

The wonder is that children brought up in that way do not turn out bad more often than they do. Their salvation is due to the fact that the governess and servants are often in all moral essentials much the superior of the parents who are capable of turning their children's training over to anybody but themselves.—Dr. William De Witt Hyde in Good Housekeeping.

Useful Sachets.

Scented pads of all sizes may be made to slip between articles in bureau drawers and trunks. The illustration, from the Delineator, shows a pad made of pale pink silk covered with sheer white organdie. A tiny ruffle of the material edged with baby ribbon is let into the edges. The top may be decorated in any desired manner with marking letters or small embroidered flowers. Figured organdie or dimity may be used to fashion the sachet if preferred, and narrow lace may be put on the edge.



A PAD TO SLIP BETWEEN CLOTHING.

The Picturesque Style.

The woman who affects the picturesque style nowadays has a large range of choice. The mode of hairdressing renders the large hat a most suitable adjunct to the gown made after those worn in the time of Louis XIV. The scarf is one of those little additions to dress which a woman can don with great significance, giving an added grace to her movements and to her toilet. Some very pretty ones are being made of tulle bordered with a ruche, in which nestle small artificial flowers, such as lilies or minute roses.

Strawberry Cups.

Scald a pint of milk and while hot stir in two tablespoonfuls of arrowroot dissolved in a little cold milk; add a quarter of a cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt, half a teaspoonful of strawberry extract; cook until creamy, then beat in one yolk and the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs; butter small cups and dust thickly with stale macaroons crushed very fine; fill with the arrowroot mixture and set on ice to become chilled; unmold and garnish with strawberries; serve a boiled custard sauce with these.

Household Brevities.

When boiling a fowl do not add salt till the last hour of cooking.

When crackers are used in stuffing a fowl, use less dressing than if breadcrumbs were the base of the forcemeat. Crackers swell more than crumbs.

Do not lay a carpet without a lining under it, even if it is nothing but a newspaper.

Break lettuce leaves apart. Do not cut them.

Never add flavoring extracts to a dish till it is cold. If put in while hot, much of the flavor passes off in the steam.

MISS IRWIN.

CROSSED THE DARK RIVER.

TWO LADIES DEAD IN THE CITY —MIZPAH LODGE LOSES A MEMBER.

WM. R. GOODWIN.

Word was received here on Saturday of the death of Mr. Wm. R. Godwin, at Bowmanville, at the age of 60 years. The deceased was a former resident of this city, and while here was in the employ of the G.T.R. A few years ago he removed to Bowmanville, where he ran the electric light plant of that town until his health failed, when he took a trip to the Pacific Coast, which did not have the desired effect, and he returned to Toronto. At the time of his death he was at his summer cottage on the lake shore at Bowmanville. The cause of death was nervous trouble. A widow survives, but no family. The deceased was a member of Mizpah Lodge, No. 127, I.O.O.F., of this city. The funeral took place this afternoon at Bowmanville, under the auspices of Florence Nightingale Lodge, I.O.O.F., of that town.

MRS. CARSCALLEN.

Mrs. Eliza M. Carscallen, widow of the late Mr. Wm. H. Carscallen, died on Saturday at the family residence, Forin street, being 52 years of age. Deceased was born in this county and had lived in Belleville for many years. She was a victim of Bright's disease, and although she had been ailing for some time, death came suddenly, as on Saturday morning she was able to be about. Mrs. Carscallen was an estimable lady, respected by all who knew her. She was a consistent member of Bridge Street Church. The remaining members of the family are one son, who is in the Yukon, and two daughters, Misses Evelyn and Lillie, at home. The funeral this afternoon was conducted by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, and many were present. The bearers were: Messrs. W. Johnson, W. J. Diamond, L. C. Pascoe, R. P. Hamilton, F. Weeks and Ald. McFee.

MRS. JAMES SPRY.

Mrs. James Spry, who had been ill for a long time, passed away on Sunday morning at her late residence, Albert street. Deceased, who was 82 years of age, was born in Devonshire, Eng. For upwards of 40 years Mrs. Spry had been a resident of this city, and had many friends here. Mr. Spry died some years ago. Deceased was for 30 years a devout member of Bleecker Avenue Methodist Church, and was in every sense of the word a genuine Christian lady. The surviving members of the family are two daughters, Mrs. J. Davis and Miss Hattie Spry, both of this city.

MRS. WALTER MARTIN.

Mrs. Martin, wife of Mr. Walter Martin, of Stirling, ex-Warden of the county, died on Saturday, after two weeks' illness. Deceased was an estimable lady and a member of and active worker in the Methodist Church. A family of four sons and one daughter survive.

WANTED FOR PERJURY.

JOHN POTTS, OF COLBORNE, ARRESTED HERE ON A SERIOUS CHARGE.

On Saturday afternoon the police received word here from Colborne to arrest a man named John Potts, who was wanted on a charge of perjury. Within two hours after receiving the message Potts was arrested by Officer Hayes and Special Constable Arnott. The warrant under which the accused was arrested reads as follows:

"That John Potts did on the 12th day of March, 1904, at the County Court Judge's Criminal Court, held by His Honor Judge Benson, at the Town of Cobourg, in the case of King vs. John Potts, as a witness in his own behalf, commit perjury."

The case in question was one of alleged assault committed upon one Sarah Wannamaker, who resides in the Township of Brighton. Constable W. H. Smith yesterday took Potts back to Colborne. The accused is a man of middle age and was married here recently to a young woman named Duesberry.

FRED GEROW'S BAD LUCK

LOST FOUR FINGERS IN A CIRCULAR SAW ACCIDENT AT MALONE.

Fred Gerow, a young man whose home is at Rossmore, was on Friday last the victim of a distressing accident. He was working near Malone for R. J. Graham, being engaged in running a circular saw. In some manner his left hand came in contact with the swift revolving saw, with the result that four fingers and a portion of the hand were taken off. After the wound had been dressed Gerow was sent to his home, arriving on Saturday.

A FAMILY NECESSITY

Is a remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back—use Nerviline; it's more penetrating, pain subduing and powerful than any other liniment, Nerviline is at least five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be over-estimated. For man or beast Nerviline is a panacea for all pain and costs only 25c per bottle. Buy Nerviline to-day.

Orangemen at Church.

ELOQUENT SERMON PREACHED TO THEM YESTERDAY BY REV. R. H. LEITCH — OTHER SERVICES.

Holloway St. Church.

At the above church yesterday morning the Orangemen and kindred societies of this city gathered in goodly numbers to hear their anniversary sermon, which was preached by Rev. R. H. Leitch, pastor of the church and Deputy Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of British North America. The brethren made a brave appearance, and the service, all through, was most impressive and fitting to the occasion. Rev. Mr. Leitch chose two texts, namely, Ps. 60, 4, and Song Sol. 2 4:

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth."

"And his banner over us was love."

The eloquent preacher heartily welcomed the brethren to worship in his church, though early in his pastorate. They were there to do honor to God and a great anniversary, and the blooming orange lilies they saw suggested the providence of the occasion and the season. Gibbon, said the preacher, has said that man is what he is born; heathen, Jew or Christian. We are not fatalists, who believe in a new birth, born of illumination and conviction. Referring to the Orange constitution, the speaker read the purpose of and the qualifications for membership, and said these were the birthright of conviction and privilege, giving first place to an open Bible and the Christian religion. God's word contained the principles and lectures and spirit of the order; how important God's Day, His house and the memory of his providences. Something of odium and derision has been attached to the name "Orangemen." It was not less so with Christian, Protestant, Methodist. We are Protestants; meaning this "pro" "openly" and testor "to bear witness." This term was used at the second Diet of Spiers in 1529. Providence protested against the invasion of England by the Spanish Armada, and a portion of the wreckage was beautifully carved and formed the front of the organ in the Cathedral at Derry. Providence protested against the Jesuitical spirit of Louis 14th, and his alliance with James the Second. Providence, no doubt, prompted the invitation to William of Orange, who had much to risk, but his march was triumphant, his labors complete in the birth of a Protestant succession. Referring to the siege of London-Derry and the battlefield of the Boyne, places the speaker had visited with no little interest and pleasure, he said that here, as of old, pillars were set up, and when the children ask what mean these? ye shall say, "The Lord wrought deliverance here," and we believe in the interests of and the progress of truth. Referring to the text, the preacher said banners were emblems of union, loyalty and victory, union in our fraternal, benevolent and humane society. All may meet on our platform; it is broad. Loyalty is an instinctive virtue for parentage, home and country, especially when governed in the interests of civil and religious liberty, as we are.

"The Briton may traverse the pole or zone,
And boldly claim his right,
For he calls such a vast domain his own,
That the sun never sets on his might."

Loyalty to God was the source of order, law and love; loyalty to His truth was loyalty to that which shall be triumphantly victorious.

Bridge Street.

"Grace," was the subject discussed by the Pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, last evening. The discourse was an able effort and much appreciated by the large congregation. The text was from 2nd Corinthians, 9th chapter and 8th verse:

"And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work."

Bethel Hall.

On Sunday evening the subject was the "Four Suppers of Scripture," the first being the Supper of Salvation, as set forth in the 14th chapter of Luke and to which all are invited. The second is the Supper of Communion, 1 Cor. 11.23. To this only those who are invited who have come to the first; none others have any right to it, as only those can remember the Lord who know him. The third Supper is found in Rev. 19.9. The marriage supper of the Lamb and only those who have come to the first supper will be there. The fourth is the Supper of Judgment, Rev. 19.17. The supper of the Great God. None who are at the first will be at it, as it will be for those who refuse to come to the Supper of Salvation provided for all, for the grace of God high appeared bringing salvation to all men.

THE GALLANT FORTY-NINTH.

LORD DUNDONALD MUCH MISSED THIS YEAR—WAS POPULAR WITH THE MEN—OFFICERS DINED AT KYLE HOUSE.

The men of the 49th Regt., after their arrival in the city on Saturday, dined at different hotels, after which they proceeded to their homes. The men were well pleased with their camp life, but many regrets were expressed at the absence, this year, of Lord Dundonald, who, last year, made himself very popular with the men by reason of his kindly words and earnest enquiries after their welfare, the same being not forgotten by the soldier boys. In that respect no former G.O.C., we are assured, ever took the same trouble or made such a minute inspection into the things which pertain to the welfare of the rank and file, from brigade drill to the cook's tent, as did Lord Dundonald. His unfair treatment by the Fisher party will not soon be forgotten.

THE OFFICERS DINE.

The officers of the 49th Regiment, on their arrival in the city, dined together at the Kyle House, where a very pleasant hour was spent. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Honorary Colonel of the Regiment, E. Guss Porter, M.P., Colonel Ponton and Major Stewart were guests of the Colonel.

In a short speech Sir Mackenzie complimented the regiment on its fine and soldierly appearance, proposing the health of Col. Orr and success to the Regiment, he (Sir Mackenzie) having assisted in the organization of No. 1 Co. of the Regiment in 1857.

Col. Orr replied in a short and pithy speech, in which he spoke in the highest terms of his men while in camp, after which Colonel Ponton proposed the health of Sir Mackenzie, Honorary Colonel of the Regiment, which was acknowledged by that gentleman, and the company separated, after singing "God Save the King."

HOW "BOB" PURDON DIED

VETERAN CONDUCTOR'S DEMISE WAS CAUSED BY HEMORRHAGE OF THE BRAIN.

Montreal, July 9.—Robert A. Purdon, the veteran conductor of the G.T.R., between Montreal and Toronto, died at the Montreal Homeopathic Hospital yesterday evening. Mr. Purdon arrived on Thursday evening on his regular run, and, not feeling well, he sent word to some of his friends, who at once got medical assistance and had him removed to the hospital. The cause of death was hemorrhage of the brain.

"Bob" Purdon was one of the best-known and popular railway men in Canada, and will be much missed on the Montreal-Toronto run. He was a member of Zetland Lodge, A.F. and A.M., and Masonic brothers here gave him every attention before he died, and in conjunction with Mr. Chas. Stewart, his running mate on the G.T.R. for thirty-eight years, took charge of the funeral arrangements here.

The funeral will take place in Toronto on Monday. Messrs. McRoole and Grose, of the Montreal Masonic Club, accompanied the remains to Toronto. Mr. Purdon leaves a widow to mourn his loss. Many beautiful wreaths were contributed by Montreal Masonic and railway friends.

DIED FROM HIS INJURIES.

FRANCIS LARKINS NEVER RECOVERED CONSCIOUSNESS, AND PASSED AWAY ON SUNDAY MORNING.

On Tuesday evening, June 28th, Mr. Francis Larkins, of Tyendinaga, was the victim of a runaway accident, and the injuries which he received terminated fatally. He died at the hospital at an early hour on Sunday morning without having regained consciousness. Deceased, who was in his 58th year, was born in this county. He lived for some time in the township of Hungerford, but for the greater portion of his life resided in Tyendinaga, where he was widely known and much respected. Mr. Larkins was a member of the Roman Catholic church. A widow, who at present is ill, and two sons, Harry and James, who live at home, survive. The remains were interred to-day at the Read burying ground.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

PETERBORO'S GALA DAY

First Hydraulic Lift Lock on the Continent Opened.

5,000 People Witnessed the Ceremony in a Drenching Rain—Marks Completion of One Stretch of the Trent Valley Canal—Distinguished Parliamentary Company Saw the Opening and Ministers and Senators Made Brief Speeches.

Peterboro, July 11.—The opening of the hydraulic lift lock on Saturday marks another period in the development of the great Trent waterway, a series of cuts and natural channels which when completed will stretch from Midland, on the Georgian Bay, to a point on Lake Ontario yet to be decided upon. The two towns, rivals for the distinction of being the outlet, are Trenton and Port Hope. The importance of this route to the shipping industry may be imagined when it is stated that it is shorter by 500 miles, counting the return trip from the Soo to Liverpool, than the Welland Canal route, and by 1,500 miles than the Erie Canal, which barge canal the State of New York proposes, to expend $101,000,000 to deepen, in order to allow the passage of 1,000-ton barges.

So far there has been expended on the Trent waterway $4,135,353, and it will require at least $5,000,000 to complete it from Georgian Bay to Lake Ontario. The hydraulic lift lock opened Saturday afternoon cost $500,000, and there will be five others required to overcome the fall of water.

M.P.'s Saw the Opening.

Saturday's event was marked by the presence of a host of lawmakers from Ottawa, who came up by special train. Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals; Sir Wm. Mulock, Hon. A. G. Blair and Prof. James Mills, members of the Railway Commission; Senators Cox, Kerr, Gibson, Watson, Young, Perley, McHugh; Hon. J. R. Stratton and Hon. F. R. Latchford, representing the Ontario Government, and the following members of the House of Commons were among the distinguished guests of the town and county who witnessed the successful passage of the first craft through the lock: Logan, McKinnon, Jabel Robinson, Hughes (Kings), Hughes (Victoria), Hon. Wm. Ross, R. Holmes, Col. Thompson, Uriah Wilson, Cochrane, McEwan, Mathieson, Walter Scott, Birkett, Heyd, Kaulbach, Wright, Oliver, Davis, Campbell, Andrew Thompson, Puttee, McGugan, Gould, Richardson, Costigan, Bennett, Bazinet, Erb, Loy, Lang, McGowan, Stewart, Grant, Kendry, Reid (Restigouche), Gibson, Turcotte.

A Drop of 65 Feet.

The distinguished guests were carried to No. 5 dam, about four miles above the lock, where luncheon was served under a large marquee, about 200 sitting down; then the Stony Lake and Empress were boarded for the run through the lock. This was the first trip of any steam craft through this completed cut, the boats being brought down from Lakefield.

The success of the opening was marred by a drenching rain, which lasted from the moment the party left lock 5 until the drop of 65 feet to the stretch of water below was safely made. But despite the great downpour about 5,000 people covered the fields in the vicinity. Peterboro was dressed in its best; the streets were beautiful with flags and bunting; the fair dames looked charming in lingerie of exquisite modes; and the craft below the lock were rigged in gay colors. No amount of rain could drive the spectators to cover, for the nearest shelter was a mile over the hills of Ashburnham. It was a day long looked forward to, and no true citizen would miss the historic event.

1 M. 52 S. the Time.

The Stony Lake was the first to be lowered, and as it entered the chamber there was much screeching and tooting of whistles. The gate closed, the chamber slowly descended and in one minute and 52 seconds the Stony Lake, with her distinguished passenger list, was ready to steam out into the stretch leading to Rice Lake, and on to Lake Ontario. The steam yacht Rob Roy and R. B. Rogers' houseboat were raised simultaneously with the lowering of the Stony Lake, and when the chamber was emptied the Empress was let down.

As the Stony Lake steamed out of the chamber Hants Logan, M.P., struck up God Save the King, and immediately after cheers were given for His Majesty, R. B. Rogers, the engineer; W. F. Francis, assistant engineer; Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Hon. A. G. Blair, and Collingwood Schrieber, Deputy Minister of Canals.

There were brief speeches. Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Sir Wm. Mulock, Senator Kerr and Senator Cox each expressed gratification over the successful completion of the lock.

The steamers at once started for Little Lake, where there was another demonstration of enthusiasm, and the ceremonies were over.

The hydraulic lift lock has been under construction since 1896. It is the only one on the continent, but there are two or three in France and Belgium. It will lift 25,000-bushel barges from the lower level of the canal 65 feet up to the higher level, or vice versa, by means of two immense steel pontoons. These pontoons are closed at their ends by means of gates hung on the lower edges, and gates being also used to close the ends of the reaches of the canal on the upper and lower levels. These pontoons, guided between three massive concrete towers, are each supported on top of the steel pistons, seven and a half feet in diameter, which work in watertight steel wells, one under each piston. Each pontoon is simultaneously up and down, being worked in balance. The stone masonry has been splendidly done, and the embankments have been beautifully sodded in terraces.

YUKON WATER RIGHTS.

What Cancellation of Treadgold Concession Has Resulted.

Ottawa, July 11.—The cancellation of the Treadgold concession, which had as its chief asset originally a monopoly of the supply of water for hydraulic mining, has been followed by important changes in the regulations for the disposal of the right to divert and use water in the Yukon for mining purposes.

The latest of these permits the owner of any ditch or water privilege to sell water to such persons and on such terms as he may deem advisable. The owner is, however, enjoined against discrimination as to prices and quantities, and his rates are subject to revision and control by the Governor-in-Council.

Alleged Firebug Arrested.

Ottawa, July 11.—John White, the alleged firebug, was arrested on Saturday night, and it is said that he was caught in the act of setting fire to the Palace Hotel sheds on Broad street. He was seen going into the shed twice and was seen coming out a moment before the fire was noticed. He was said to have been seen getting oily waste in the C.P.R. yards. White is a ticket-of-leave man, having seven years ago been sentenced to ten years for setting a fire among the big industries on Victoria Island. He has been on parole for two years or so. Last year he was arrested on suspicion of having started the big $6,000,000 fire on May 10, among the lumber piles, but the evidence was incomplete.

C.A.R. Puts Up.

Ottawa, July 11.—The Canada Atlantic Railway Company has deposited with the Secretary of State a mortgage upon the railway and its properties to secure an issue of $14,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds authorized by the act of last session.

NOT FAR FROM KINGDOM

TAKE STEP THAT WILL MAKE YOU HAPPIER THAN WORLDLY SUCCESS.

SADDEST WORD IS "ALMOST"

"Not Far From the Kingdom" Is Just to Be As Irretrievably and Utterly Lost As If You Had Never Heard the Gospel at All—Dangers of Delay Vividly Portrayed By the Preacher.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 10.—The preacher in this sermon shows by illustration and incident that true and enduring happiness and satisfaction are not to be found in worldly success, but in embracing the offer of salvation through Christ. The text is Mark xii, 34, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

What is to you the saddest word in all the English language? Edgar Allan Poe, that brilliant genius of American literature, whose dissipations endungeoned him in a chamber of horrors as ghastly as that in which Thomas De Quincey was compelled to live and whose raven of delirium tremens sounded his death knell when he had just reached forty years of age, has made the word "nevermore" awful in its significance. In it we hear the black bird of demoniacal despair croaking a dirge. In it are heard the sobs of breaking hearts and are seen the ghostlike horrors of a living charnel house. "Nevermore! Nevermore! Nevermore!" To many that word will always be the saddest of all words.

Thomas Carlyle, the great English essayist and philosopher, the master of mighty sentences and prose master-pieces, dipped his pen in the reddest of all inks when he wrote the word "ought." The great author of the justly famous philosophical dissertation upon "The French Revolution" declared that the word "ought" is the saddest of all words. It has in it all the harsh and reverberating voices which run the gamut of remorse. Carlyle's conception of the Imperial force of that word "ought" had in it the thunder of Sinai, and to the offender recreant to duty it still sounded, mingled with the taunts of the fiends of the eternal inferno, deriding and mocking the miserable sufferer with the reminders of the bliss he might have enjoyed if he had done as he ought. Some have declared that the saddest of all words is "gone," others "death," others "despair." But to-day I want to call the attention to another word which I think is the saddest word ever uttered by man. It was that which King Agrippa spake to Paul when on the Roman tribunal of Caesarea Philippi he said: "Almost! Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Ah, yes, King Agrippa was so near the kingdom of God that just one step forward would have changed him from a pagan into a humble and repentant follower of the Nazarene. But that one step was never taken. King Agrippa was "almost" persuaded to be a Christian, but his "almost" never brought him into safety and eternal life.

To-day I am going to try to help some of you to overcome that saddest of all words, "almost." I am going to show some of you that, like the scribe of my text, who came to question Jesus, you are "not far from the kingdom of God," but I am also going to show you that to be "almost" saved and yet not saved is to be lost completely and utterly lost. As the man whirling down the rapids of Niagara, who just misses by one inch the rope which is thrown for his rescue, so you who miss by a little the offer of redemption are as utterly lost as if you had never heard the offer. Nay, there is in your fate the unutterable sadness of being so near salvation and missing it after all. The loss of your soul is like the loss of life to the hunter whose rifle ball just misses the heart of the tiger that is leaping upon his defenseless body. It is to be lost just as much as were the poor fellows who were imprisoned a few years ago in the iron hulk of the steamers burning at the wharfs of Hoboken, in New York Harbor. Frantically they stood at the barred portholes. Frantically they stretched forth their arms through the iron gratings. They could see the blue waters of the harbor. They could hear the calls of the would be rescuers hard at work. But they were lost, entirely lost, though there was "only one step" between them and perfect safety.

Almost saved! Yes, you are. How do I know it? I learn how near you have come to salvation as I look at the entries on those white pages sewed between the Old and the New Testaments of the family Bible. By this record of the family births and deaths I find your father was a Christian. Your mother was a Christian. Your sisters and brothers were all Christians. I find also that your parents reconsecrated their lives for God's service when they held you before the sacred altar on the day you were baptized. It is a very easy matter for you to become a Christian, with such a family history as that. The son of a good doctor, all other conditions being equal, has at least ten years the advantage of a young man entering the medical profession who is not the son of a physician. The child who comes from a Christian home has a far greater chance of being a Christian than one who is not the son of a Christian, or than one who has never been brought by youthful association in contact with the Christian life.

"'Tis true," says some young man to me, "I was born in a Christian home. I am not near, however, but very, very far from the kingdom of God. Why, after I left my Christian home I seemed to be possessed not with seven devils, but seventy times seven devils. No sooner did I leave home and go away from mother and father and I plunged into a life of dissipation. I drank, I gambled, I blasphemed. I did everything I ought not to have done, and I left undone everything I ought to have done. It is said that when Lysimachus was fighting against the Getae he was entrapped by his enemies in the desert sands. His thirst became so great that he offered his whole kingdom for a drink of water, as Esau sold his birthright for a mass of pottage. But no sooner had Lysimachus slaked his thirst than he cried: 'Ah, wretched me, who for such a momentary gratification should have lost so great a kingdom.' Though I have been brought up in a Christian home, for the momentary satisfying of my evil desires I have stifled all those pure influences of the past. I am like a man who, to quench his thirst, has done more than to barter away a kingdom. I have bartered away my life. The chalice of sin which I have lifted to my lips was of poison. I feel it now, dulling my brain, dulling my heart, dulling my moral sensibilities. I feel as if I were already dead, for my nobler self has perished. Eternal life is lost to me."

Not so fast, brother; not so fast. You have flung yourself into the quagmire of sin, but by your very words of despair I know you are near to the kingdom. I have had in my time much experience with young men, and I have sometimes found that, like the prodigal who left his father's home for the far country, many young men reared in the best of homes have flung themselves into the seething whirlpool of sin. But these young men were like the prodigal also in that they came back to their father's home after they had spent their all. The golden cords of parental prayer are now tugging at your heart. Vilest of sinners you may have been; most heartless of wayward boys may have been your history, but to-day God is calling; your dead mother, your redeemed mother, is calling; your broken hearted father is calling: "Come, come, come home! Oh, sinner, come home!" Will you hear the cry? Way off in that far country of sin "thou are not far from the kingdom of God." Thou art not far from Christ, but near, on account of your early Christian home training.

Almost saved! Yes, you are. I know it by the unhappy looks that are chiseled in the wrinkles of your face. When you started out in life you thought the height of a man's happiness could be estimated by the length of his bank account. You thought the worldwide area of his joy could be always circumscribed only by the hemispheric spread of his fame. But now by bitter experience you know that wealth and fame only bring added cares. You know that if a man lives for himself alone, if he does not seek the higher joys of the soul, if he does not live for Christ, seeking also the welfare of his brother man, he can find no happiness on earth at all.

You think worldly success can bring true happiness? If it could, why did it not bring happiness to James G. Blaine, the "Henry Clay" of the latter part of the past century. Murat Halstead relates how he went to see Mr. Blaine in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. The death pallor was on his cheek. In a few weeks his broken heart was to cease to beat. Mr. Blaine sat looking into the blazing fire. Murat Halstead could not say a word. His heart was too full. After the two friends sat thus for a short time, Mr. Blaine heaved a deep sigh as he said, "Oh, Halstead, I could have stood it all if I had not lost my two boys." He was finding then, as Hanna found, and as a host of famous men have found, that happiness and true satisfaction cannot be obtained from the world. The world misrepresents them, ridicules them and decries them, and, whether it gives them its prizes or not, it wounds and tortures them.

Oh, rich man! I appeal to your experience. Have you not realized that happiness is not in wealth? Have there not come times in your life when you have felt that money and honor and power alike fail to give you satisfaction? You are disappointed with your life. Turn to Christ, who says to such as you, "He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst again." Come to him. Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.

Almost saved! Yes, I know it. Why? For weeks, perhaps, you have been lying prostrate with a dangerous sickness near the dividing line, the crossing of which means the recreation and the spiritualization and the redemption of your life. That sick bed means to you in a spiritual sense what an invalid's bed meant in a physical sense to him sick of the palsy who was laid at Christ's feet. In the second chapter of Mark we read about the wonderful incident which took place in Capernaum. No sooner did the people of that city hear that Jesus had come than the multitudes began to gather about him. They crowded into the room where he was. They crowded the front yard of his residence. On the outskirts of the crowd we see a couple of men carrying between them one who was sick of the palsy. "Oh," they say to each other, "if we can only bring our brother to Christ, he will cure him." I think, from reading between the lines of this chapter, that the invalid himself did not care whether he saw Christ or not. He was too sick to care. His limbs hung limp and heavy. His eyelids dropped; the eyes were glassy. His skin was flabby and almost dead. But because the invalid was nine-tenths dead that made no difference to the two friends. As they could not push through the crowds who were jostling about the front door they climbed up to the roof of the house. They then let down the ropes and pulled the sick man up, bed and all. Then with their axes they broke open the door and lowered the sick man down through the roof to the feet of the Saviour, who, seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." And he arose. The loose muscles stiffened. The eyes became alert. The blood again coursed rapidly through the clogged arteries. He walked; yea, the sick man walked. He was healed by being placed, a hopeless, helpless invalid, at the feet of Jesus Christ.

Sickness has been a spiritual blessing to you, O man, as the palsy was to the invalid of old. It has placed you almost within touch of our Saviour and King. For years and years you did not know what a pain meant. When you heard people complaining about their invalidism you had no sympathy. You would petulantly say: "Nine-tenths of these so-called invalids are mere hypochondriacs. If men and women would only get up and stop their complaining and stop dosing themselves with medicines they would be all right." When a minister in church would preach from the text, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," you would settle back in your seat and smile. You would say to yourself: "Perhaps. Perhaps not. My ancestors were all long-lived. I guess I will be also." Then you would complacently pat your chest as you expanded your lungs three or four inches, and you would say: "Well, my ancestors never had a finer breathing apparatus than I have. Perhaps I shall die to-night. Perhaps not."

But two years ago there came that sudden attack of illness. It came almost without any warning at all. You remember how your cheek became as white as that of a corpse and your lips turned blue and cold. You remember how that pneumonia stabbed at your lungs, or how that typhoid made you sink so low that for weeks and weeks you hovered between life and death. You remember how asthma choked you until it seemed as though you would go mad with the agony. Aye, that sickness made out of you a changed man. When the minister now announces the text, Luke, twelfth chapter and twentieth verse, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," you do not flippantly say: "Perhaps. Perhaps not." You know it is not out of the range of possibilities that this night you may be brought face to face with God at the judgment seat of Christ. O man, even while I speak to-day all the good and the bad of your past life are flying swifter than the winds through your seething brain. Aye, they are flying as swiftly as the panorama of bygone years in a second of time moves before the vision of a drowning man. Your past sicknesses have changed your feelings toward God. The pain at your heart is warning you that "God shall bring every work unto judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." This day—aye, this very minute—on account of that past sick bed, "thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

We all marvel at the wonderful ability of observation to which the trappers and the hunters of old were able to train their visual powers. For days and weeks the Indian scouts were able to follow their enemies across the western prairies. By the twisted blades of grass and by other minute signs they were able to tell how many Indians were in the war party ahead, how many horses and cattle and squaws and papooses. During the Austro-Prussian war in 1866 Archduke Joseph of Austria was warned of an imminent night attack by a gypsy soldier who was able to foresee the advance of the pursuing hosts by watching the birds fly over the Austrian encampment. This soldier said to Prince Joseph: "Your Highness, birds sleep as well as men. These birds would not be flying about at this time of night if they had not been disturbed. The enemy in large numbers is marching through the woods and has frightened them. There will soon be fighting on our front lines." But, though hunters and trappers have almost miraculous seeing powers in reference to the natural world, it does not take an inspired vision to see that we are now living in a time of great religious awakening. How else can you account for the thousands who, as converts, as giving their hearts to Jesus Christ under the consecrated labors of the evangelistic committee of the Presbyterian Church? How else can you account for the wonderful meetings of Campbell Morgan in America and of Torrey and Alexander in Australia and England, and the crowded schools for Bible study in Winona and Northfield and Chautauqua and Moody's Institute of Chicago? Everywhere the vital question is upon every lip, "What shall I then do with Jesus, who is called the Christ?" Like Pilate before the Jewish people, you must decide the question in reference to Jesus. You must decide for Christ or against Christ. And in bringing you up to this question I cannot be far wrong in stating that "thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

The last time Dwight L. Moody ever preached was at a great series of meetings being held in Convention Hall, Kansas City. Suddenly he broke down, and the doctors told him he must stop work at once. They bundled the great evangelist up and started him east for his Northfield home. But, though the doctors could silence his tongue, they could not keep still his pen. When they carried him to Northfield, with his weak fingers he wrote out a telegram to his Kansas City friends who were carrying on the meetings in his stead. His telegram went something like this: "Mr. So-and-so, Kansas City: Have reached home safely. Regret exceedingly being forced to leave. Had I been with you to-night I would have preached on, 'Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.' My prayer is that many may be led into the kingdom under Mr. Torrey's preaching." Oh, my friends, the redeemed lips of the sainted evangelist are pleading with you from this text in this service to-day. That same divine power which brought thousands and tens of thousands of sinners to the fountain of eternal life is pleading with you to come to Christ, even now while great multitudes are seeking him. Like King Agrippa, are you going to be "almost persuaded" and lost? Or like Paul, the "chief of sinners," are you to be coronated and to have a seat upon a throne in heaven with Jesus Christ?

Lord Strathcona As Governor.

Montreal, July 12.—Although it is denied in certain quarters that Hon. Clifford Sifton will replace Lord Strathcona in London, leading Liberals here claim that the High Commissionership is what the Minister of the Interior is after.

Some Bank of Montreal men were discussing the matter yesterday, and one of them remarked that if Mr. Sifton went to London Lord Strathcona would return to Canada as Governor-General.

JAPANESE NOW READY TO LAND FORCES AT YINKOW.

Jap Vesels Keeping in Touch With Advance on Land

Their Objective Thought to be Taitchekiao in Plan to Force Russians Back—Kaichou Fell Before Series of Skirmishes on July 7 and 8—Jap Scouts Close to Yinkow—Russians Lose 1,000 Killed at Port Arthur.

Yinkow, July 12.—Japanese vessels have been seen off Kaichou. It is believed that they are keeping in touch with the advance of land forces, and that if the Japanese take Taitchekiao, which is understood to be their objective, it is thought that a landing will be made simultaneously at Yinkow.

The fighting at Kaichou consisted of a series of skirmishes on July 7 and July 8, ending at the occupation of the town by Gen. Oku's troops.

The Japanese began to push their advance north at dawn July 9, and since then they have proceeded steadily.

They kept their artillery well to the front and shelled and occupied Pintzan, seven miles north of Kaichou, at noon July 9. It is now reported that they are in close touch with Taitchekiao.

Japanese scouts are close to Yinkow. They can be seen on the neighboring hilltops, from which they occasionally fire upon the Russian outposts.

Jap on Russ Heels.

Tatchekiao, July 12.—A Russian correspondent of the Associated Press, who has just arrived with the Russian rear guard after a running fight from Kaichou, half way here (Tatchekiao), says: "We evacuated Kaichou to-day (Saturday) after a fight lasting through Friday. We made a short stand at Pintzan, seven miles north of Kaichou. The Japanese kept on our heels, and there were constant exchanges between the Russian and Japanese batteries. The Japanese advance stopped eight miles south of here. The fighting along the road was lively, but our losses were small.

"There had been preliminary skirmishing and manoeuvring for position around Kaichou since July 5. On that day two companies were caught in the hills to the eastward and surrounded by six Japanese battalions. They cut their way through, however, and returned to Kaichou, bringing many wounded."

Russians Lost 1,000.

Che Foo, July 12.—A European, who left Port Arthur at 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, reports that the Japanese made a torpedo attack Sunday afternoon, attempting to penetrate into the harbor. They were repulsed without loss to either side.

The European further reports that on July 7 severe fighting occurred around Port Arthur. The Russians claimed to have driven the Japanese back on all sides, but admitted a loss of more than one thousand killed. Several hundred wounded are said to have arrived at Port Arthur, July 8, and it was reported that more were to come in.

MR. FIELDING'S BANQUET

Warmly Welcomed to Toronto By Club That Bears His Name.

One of the Most Successful Social-Political Gatherings Ever Held in Toronto—Speeches, However, Were of the Staid Order, Except That of Charles Marcil, Who Proved Himself An Orator Second Only to His Leader.

Toronto, July 12.—The American room, as it is called, the banqueting hall, of the King Edward, last night sheltered the most numerous gathering it has yet contained on the occasion of the banquet of the Fielding Club in honor of their patron, Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance. Over 300 guests were accommodated in the brilliant hall and if the oratory, with the exception of the brief, but polished remarks of Charles Marcil, M.P., Bonaventure, was not of the first order, it was concise and practical and to the Liberal point.

Premier Ross Better.

In a letter of congratulation Premier Ross stated that he was resting easily and felt better than when he left Toronto, but felt that he should prolong his holiday as long as possible. He regretted not to be present.

Occupying the chair sat President James McLaughlin and next to him were Hon. W. S. Fielding, Right Hon. William Mulock, M.P., Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Minister of Railways; Hon. William Patterson, Minister of Customs; Hon. J. M. Gibson, Attorney-General; Hon. Richard Harcourt, Minister of Education; Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provinvial Secretary; Hon. E. J. Davis, Minister of Crown Lands; Hon. Senator Cox, Hon. Senator L. M. Jones, Hon. Senator Kerr, Mayor Urquhart; R. F. Sutherland, M.P.; T. O. Davis, M.P.; Archibald Campbell, M.P.; W. M. German, M.P.; Robert Jaffary, J. A. Macdonald, H. Miles, ex-president Board of Trade, Montreal; Aemilius Irving, K.C.; Hon. S. C. Biggs, Ald. J. J. Ward and W. J. Clark.

Mr. Fielding's Speech.

Hon. Mr. Fielding, who was received with great enthusiasm, made a speech of the budget order, varied with his opinion of the working of his Ministerial colleagues in their various departments. Of course, they were all heaven-born administrators. Towards the close of his speech he made a reference to the next elections. Mr. Fielding was guarded in his reference to the possibility of an election in November. The elections might come this year or next, or in a few months, but the Fielding Club would be ready.

Off his own bat Mr. Emmerson announced that the I.C.R. would be extended to Toronto, and the pity is that his own province is not backed by any official inclination in that direction.

The orator of the evening was Charles Marcil, M.P., but to appreciate him it is necessary to hear him.

The banquet was a splendid success and crowns its promoters with Liberal glory.

May Call 12,000 Out.

Kansas City, July 12.—Unless the packers recede from their position in the wage scale controversy, it is expected that the 12,000 men and women employed in the Kansas City packing plants, and who owe allegiance to the Amalgamated Butchers' Workmen's Union, will go on a strike to-day at noon. The plants that will be affected are the Armour, Swift, Fowler, Ruddy, Cudahy and Schwarzschild & Sulzberger.

$10,000 Fire at Montreal.

Montreal, July 12.—The explosion of an oil furnace in the hammer shop of the G.T.R. shops at Point St. Charles yesterday morning resulted in a fire that did considerable damage. The spring shop, the blacksmith shop, and the hammer shop of the railway, the centre frame of the blacksmith shop, which is over 100 feet in length, was completely destroyed. The damage is estimated at $10,000.

Admiral Douglas Will Enquire.

St. Louis, July 12.—The British cruiser Ariadne, with Vice-Admiral Sir Archibald Douglas on board, sailed Sunday for Bay of Islands, where Admiral Douglas will personally enquire into the difficulties between the French and Newfoundland fishermen. The commander of the French squadron will sail on his flagship next Tuesday with the same object.

Train Attacked.

Vienna, July 12.—A despatch from Belgrade to The Neues Weiner Tageblatt says it is reported that an attack was made on a train running from Salonica to Constantinople, near Dede-Agach, as a result of which many persons were killed or injured. No details are given.

Four Months For Selling Liquor.

Bowmanville, July 12.—John Whitesides, Hampton, who was for nineteen years on the Toronto police force, was yesterday sentenced by Police Magistrate Horsey to four months in the Central Prison with hard labor for selling liquor without a license.

A lot of good little boys and girls have gone up into new classes, and it may make their parents feel anything but good when they think of the new books they have to buy for the good little dears.

No one will deny that the hard-worked Aldermen deserve a holiday, and we move that they be given a little recreation at the Y.M.C.A. camp next week. It would be a refreshing sight to see the City Fathers, headed by the Mayor, shooting the water chutes just like a lot of ordinary bounders.

* * *

No doubt about it, the Council acted wisely in turning down that cool request of the City Treasurer's, viz., that the city pay for his bonds. It is an unfortunate truth in this good old city that some people seem to think the treasury is fair game, and no sooner do they obtain a situation in the employ of the corporation than they begin to scratch their thinkers and lay plans to see how they can get their salary increased in some way or another. It is gratifying to see that the Council—or at least a majority of them—were apparently prepared to defeat the Treasurer's request had it not been ruled out of order by the chairman.

* * *

It is all very well to say, "Such and such a thing is done in other places." Other places, perhaps, enjoy different conditions, and have not the big debenture debt that we have. But, even though the city were in a condition to be generous, there is the by-law, which distinctly states that the City Treasurer shall provide his own bonds. How would our astute City Solicitor get over a clause like that, even though the Council had been weak enough to grant the Treasurer's request.

Fine weather, this, for making the Orange lilies grow.

But what do Orangemen care for a little rain! Sure, they were wetter than this one fine day, when they crossed the Boyne water.

* * *

Anyhow, the boys made a brave show this morning when they started off for Picton, and if they did get wet the colors they wore won't run, for rain or anything else. Here's luck to them.

* * *

His Worship Mayor Chown informs us that no Public Works money has been used in providing material for the building of granolithic walks. Five thousand dollars of the Public Works appropriation, the Mayor says, has this year, so far, been expended on legitimate public works, such as granolithic crossings, repairs to wooden sidewalks, grading of streets, etc. The bulk of the latter work, it seems, has been done in Coleman ward, and it is doubtful if, had the consent of the Council been asked for, so much would have been done.

All expenses in connection with the new walks, such as providing material, etc., have been met out of the trifle over $7,000 so far expended. This, it will be seen, leaves something under $8,000 still to be spent, so that the work should last for some time yet, and many more new walks be built, and certainly, providing they do not run us into the Bankruptcy Court, we cannot get too many of them.

* * *

The local rolling mills, we are told, are sending out circulars soliciting business, it being the intention to start work, with a good staff of men, on Monday morning next. All obstacles in connection with the operation of the mills have now been removed, which is good news. The same means much for Belleville.

This kind of weather on the "Glorious Twelfth" forcibly reminds one that the getting up of holiday celebrations is precarious business.

Footbridge Will be Repaired Now and Rebuilt in the Good Old Winter Time.

City Treasurer's Request re Bonds Declared Out of Order—Cost of Walks.

Council met last night, Ald. Gordon was the only absentee.

Mr. T. S. Carman wrote asking that a granolithic walk be laid around the Carman Opera House on Church and Bridge Sts., on the usual terms. This was discussed in committee, and the matter was referred.

The following accounts were presented and passed:

Walker Foundry Co.	$ 16.12
Mac Machine Co.	6.25
D. Bleecker	100.00
H. McInnich	23.25
H. McInnich	28.35
D. M. Waters	3.00
J. D. Collip	28.15
Trenton Electric Co.	37.50
J. Cassidy	.85
G.T.R. freight	.50
Canada Rubber Co.	15.60
Canada Rubber Co.	.45
J. Lewis & Co.	1.20

The Surveyor presented a report showing that the granolithic walks already constructed, and those for which by-laws had been passed, would cost $20,402.

In Committee.

Ald. Marsh was chairman in committee of the whole.

There were no amendments to the various committee's reports, as already published.

It was resolved to grant $50 per annum to each member of the Court of Revision, and also to extend the water main to the hospital, a hydrant to be placed within the grounds.

The City Treasurer's account for $72, the same being to pay for his bonds for two years, was declared out of order by the Chairman, after Ald. Panter and McFee had spoken against it, and Ald Ketcheson in favor of it.

A special committee was appointed, consisting of the Mayor, Ald. McFee and Panter, to inspect the different walks and see what new ones will be built this year.

It was resolved to temporarily repair the footbridge and rebuild it next winter, the cost then being much lighter.

Messrs. Baxter and Young, of Detroit, were given the contract for installing coal retorts at the Gas works, at a cost of $8,600.

By-laws.

Two by-laws were passed, one in relation to a granolithic walk on George St., and the other ordering the repair of a portion of the bay bridge road.

Motions.

It was resolved to build a granolithic crossing at the intersection of Queen and John Sts.

The Treasurer was authorized to pay accounts endorsed by the various chairmen during the holiday of the Council.

On motion of Ald. Panter, the Council adjourned till September 12th, the Mayor in the meantime to call a special meeting if necessary.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

Annoyed by Dogs.

The guests at Hotel Quinte were much disturbed and annoyed during last night by the continuous fighting and growling of canines, which seem to congregate in that vicinity. We were informed by a traveller that he was unable to obtain sleep on account of the noise until nearly daylight this morning. An effort should be made by the owners of the dogs to keep them off the streets or possibly some of these nights they will be severely dealt with.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

FEED AND MILK.

How the Character and Quantity of a Ration Affect the Flow.

The dairy industry has perhaps reached a higher stage of scientific development than any other branch of agriculture. Either purposely or unknowingly most dairymen with whom this branch of agriculture is a business proposition closely follow the practices laid down as a result of the great amount of scientific investigation which has been devoted to the many phases of milk production, writes the agricultural editor of the Chicago Tribune. In spite of this there are elementary principles which many good and successful dairymen do not understand or upon which there are radical differences of opinion, based upon practical experience.

All dairymen know that the dairy cow must be liberally fed in order that she be stimulated to her best production of milk and recognize that she is rarely given more of palatable and nutritious feed than she will pay for at the milk pail. The effect of quantity of feed in increasing or decreasing the volume of milk flow is understood, but the effects of variation of feed upon the constituent elements of the milk flow are less understood. Many dairymen firmly believe that butter fat or the solids in milk can be changed by changes in character of feed and in the nutritive elements which it contains, frequently claiming personal experience as a foundation for the belief.

Possibly the most common belief is that succulent feed causes a thinner—that is, more watery—milk, the volume being increased, but the richness, percentage of butter fat or of solid elements being correspondingly smaller. Many and careful experiments, both in this country and abroad, demonstrate beyond a doubt that the butter fat content is not decreased by succulent feed. Taking grass as an example, it is clearly established that the percentage of butter fat is equally large in milk from a cow fed on the most succulent of June grass as in milk from the same cow fed on hay. In fact, various experiments seem to indicate a small fraction more butter fat from the grass feed, but the difference is more properly chargeable to the favorable effect upon the nervous system of sunlight, pleasant weather and outdoor life enjoyed by the cow on pasture. The point is that succulent food does not form watery milk.

Experiments in feeding distillery slops, a most watery feed, further confirm the conclusion that butter content is not affected. The conclusion is inevitable that succulent feeds have no unfavorable effect upon milk composition, though it is possible that much diluted food, like distillery slops, brewers' grains or pomace fed in large quantities for long periods, might prove injurious through physical derangements.

It is probable that so many dairymen who hold erroneous opinions as to the possibility of affecting the quality of their milk by the character of their feed are led into the error because a marked improvement of the ration leads to a greatly increased flow and consequent larger total fat content. The correctness of the data established by careful records is supported by natural laws. In nature the function of milk is the nurture of the young. If it were subject to constant variation in constituent elements, with changes in food quality, the existence of the young would be constantly threatened.

To improve the quality of the milk, the constant aim of the successful dairyman, he must look to breed and not to feed. Constant selection of strains of blood, made with a view to butter fat records, is the only way to improvement. The question of feed relates solely to the volume of milk flow.

Cows Must Be Sheltered.

The delicate system of a highly bred dairy cow and the heavy drain caused by the large flow of milk make it imperative that she be sheltered from storms in the cold weather. The stable must be comfortably warm, with an abundance of sunlight.

THE CHEESEMAKER

Theoretically a cheesemaker is supposed to be sufficiently busy with work inside the factory to leave but little time to interest himself with outside affairs, but practically his interests outside are as great as if not greater than that branch of his work relating directly to the making up of milk, said F. G. Short in an address before the Wisconsin cheesemakers' convention.

In actual work we have a condition where the patron is at one end of a seesaw, the customer at the other and the cheesemaker in the middle, trying to keep both ends even.

An average cheesemaker can take good milk and make a good cheese, but it needs no prophet nor the son of a prophet to foresee that dirty, tainted milk will make a poor cheese in spite of the efforts of the most successful among you.

The cheesemaker's ability to change the quality of his milk is limited. He can neither pasteurize nor sterilize. The little he can do with a starter toward improving conditions does not have a marked influence on the quality of milk if it is poor in the beginning. So his skill is largely dependent on the personal habits of from twenty to sixty men who supply him with his raw material, and it naturally follows that he must take an interest in things outside the factory whether he desires it or not.

Salting Cheese.

Good dairy salt, not too fine, should be added at the rate of two to three pounds of salt to the curd obtained from 1,000 pounds of milk. Great care should be exercised in securing the very best salt; otherwise the highest grade of cheese cannot be secured.

JUNE FASHIONS.

Ancient Modes—Popularity of Veiling For Dresses and Suits.

Colors and textures are alike fine this season. Even the new mohairs drape beautifully, and the new taffetas are as soft as crepe de chine. The 1830 style still leads, although certain Parisian costumes show a hint of the directoire. Louis XV. trimmings appear in the shape of garlands of roses and ample lace ruffles. The new pointed bodices tightly draped over a fitted lining are decidedly Louis XV., and the same can be said of the front panel, which may be seen in many prints of the period carried out in an entirely different material from the gown. The twisted and knotted ribbons also belong to this same period.

A USEFUL HAT.

Veiling is by long odds the most popular spring and summer fabric. Every conceivable shade is used, from white to deep plum. The delicate cadet blue is especially smart when combined with green. A great deal of voile is also being made up into blouse tailor mades. The skirts are much shirred over a tight fitting foundation.

There is just now a craze for a peculiar tint of green, and this is especially chic made up over white silk, which gives a changeable effect.

Now it is for both the face and hat veil to be en suite, and they must in addition harmonize with the dress and hat with which they are worn. The rainbow (or ombre) veil is a novelty, shading from light to dark, the light portion covering the hat, some of them shading from a dark blue to green and others from a pale cream to a rich orange.

The illustration shows a hat of rough green straw trimmed with bands of white roses. JUDIC CHOLLET.

IN WOMAN'S REALM.

Heavy Linens Are Fashionable—Popularity of Browns and Tans.

Heavy linens will be the fashion for walking costumes. A smart gown seen recently was of the linen canvas, trimmed with lace and having a short Eton coat with a deep shoulder cape, while the vest was of white and gold.

TAN STREET COSTUME.

In Paris brown is a great deal worn and will be so during the summer. It is combined with coral pink, shading into flame color.

Changeable taffetas promise to be worn this summer both for shirt waists and for tailor made suits. There is a new shade of ecru, verging on the yellow, but this is only becoming to the woman with pink cheeks and a clear complexion.

Primrose pink and violets combine well on the fashionable hat. They are worn with the shaded taffetas and shaded chiffons which are now all the vogue.

All the new gowns are made with gaugings, flouncings and ruchings, and a good many of them are unlined.

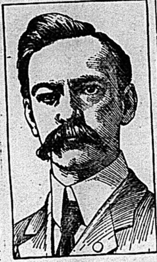
Quaint picturesque fichus of taffeta silk adorned with ruchings of silk and lace medallions are decidedly effective. For later wear they will be superseded by thin muslin or chiffon, lined with delicately toned silk and trimmed with puffs of lace.

A simple bridesmaid's dress was of white brocade, with a Louis Seize design in pale pink and blue (the touch of color being most effective), draped with flowers and festoons of lace, the pointed bodice terminating between two draped panniers in the watteau style.

The illustration shows a tan veiling gown over brown silk, trimmed with darker velvet. JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE DAIRYMAN

During my travels among the creameries of Minnesota, especially in the western part of the state, I have visited a large number of creameries receiving both hand and separator cream and whole milk, and often—yes, too oftent—I met with the assertion by the buttermaker that he doesn't need a starter at his factory, that the hand separator cream is starter enough, and, in fact, he actually does use it with which to ripen cream skimmed at the factory, says E. K. Slater in Creamery Journal. He does not consider it a real starter perhaps, but by mixing his whole product together he is virtually carrying out the principles of cream ripening, but without regard to results. I will admit that in some instances this is absolutely necessary, as in the case of the buttermaker who receives a large amount, perhaps nearly all hand separator cream. At the majority of our factories, however, a small amount of the raw material is cream, and in such cases it is quite possible to keep the hand separator and factory cream separate until the latter is ripened by the aid of a good starter. Cool the hand separator cream if sour down as low as possible and keep it in a tank or other receptacle until the cream from the factory machine is ripened and cooled to churning temperature, and then the two products may be mixed together. The ripening process should be so conducted that the different batches of cream may be mixed together the evening of the same day they are received at the creamery.



J. G. MOORE.
[President Wisconsin Buttermakers' association.]

Good Time For Dairymen.

Claims are being made that Wall street is declaring hard times for this country during the next few years, writes a contributor to Creamery Journal. The dairymen can feel contented in the knowledge that the members of Wall street have very few, if any, strings on the dairymen to pull. The price of meat and oftentimes the different grains is said to be controlled by a few men, but butter goes on an open, uncontrolled, competitive market, which is being guarded against unjust and fraudulent competition by our zealous coworkers in the National Dairy union. The signs of hard times as predicted by some men are in some ways encouraging to dairymen. In the words of one of our loyal Iowa dairymen, "Hard times make farmers milk more cows."

Effect of Air on Cream.

Professor Leze, a noted dairy expert of France, makes the following statement regarding the effect of air on cream and its relation to flavor in butter: "It is easy to prove that air is detrimental, for the superior, or first, layers of cream, those exposed to the air, have always a disagreeable flavor, and they are rejected in consequence. Finally we may point out that the most apparent and genuine superiority of cream raised spontaneously over cream mechanically separated is especially found in this absolute want of mixture with air when the cream rises by gravitation. It is also interesting to show that if we add to cream certain ferments free from oxygen the quality is much improved. We insist upon these new ideas as of the highest practical importance."

June Conditions In the Stable.

Dairy stables can be made to substantially give June conditions, and these essentials are light, warmth, air and succulent food. That is all a cow gets in June, says John Gould in Stockman and Farmer. First make the stable close, so as to exclude the common ingress of outside air; make the ceiling overhead so that the air as warmed by the bodies of the cows is retained in the stable and not diffused into space. Put in plenty of windows, so as to get the sunshine into the stables. If you are afraid of the loss of heat at night, put some shade on for nights. Have a clean floor of some kind. Cement with roughened surface to prevent slipping makes a floor that can be kept clean and dry, and such a floor, with the aid of the sunlight, is never foul, redolent with ferments or a creator of noxious gases. With good bedding, absorbents in the gutter and a nitrogen catcher like plaster, South Carolina rock or even road dust for the gutter, the smells of a stable are prevented.

It Is the Mind That Sees.

How do we see? Did you ever chance to think? I have asked quite a number of people lately, and they reply: "With our eyes, of course. How else?" or words to that effect. Did you ever realize how much of our vision is mental? We see nothing properly and definitely until the mind lends its perception. We may gaze steadfastly at a picture, yet be unable to see anything but a confused mass of color, because the mind is seeing faces and scenes a thousand miles away perhaps. Call the mental vision back, and the figures on the canvas take their proper places. At once we see the picture. Or shut your eyes. Can you not see the faces of those you love or hate as clearly as you ever saw them with the physical means of sight? How many times one glances at his watch, yet when asked the time as he replaces it in his pocket is unable to tell simply because he looked only with the eyes and not with the mind also.—Exchange.

Music In Japan.

Music in the eyes of the Japanese is a very inferior art, the general belief being that the combination of sounds may possibly please women and children, but that a Japanese gentleman could not possibly tolerate them, no matter under what pretext. In fact, it was not very long ago that the profession of musician was considered by the Japanese as being an insult to human dignity, and, whereas there have existed for centuries popular songs which water carriers and the workers in the rice fields sang in chorus as well as war songs sung by the sailors, the profession of musician has been considered unworthy of any man and has been exclusively left with the women, it being largely for the purpose of clearly characterizing and accentuating her inferiority that she has been allowed to exercise her aptitudes and tastes in musical compositions.

Bird Characteristics.

Among all the birds of this country the hawk and parrot come the nearest to using their feet like hands. Wading birds and scratching birds develop a very large foot. Birds that are in the air most of the time have much more delicate feet than those that are on the ground frequently. The variety of bills is quite as astounding as that of the claws. The hook on the end of the bill almost always denotes a bird of prey. Flat bills denote fly catching birds—kingfishers, herons, etc. The meadow lark that is much on the ground has strong, stout legs, and the oriole, which is more in the air, has slender legs. The stiffened tail is not confined to woodpeckers and chimney swifts, but the bobolink that clings to the long grass has also stiffened tail feathers to help support the bird upright.

Two Superstitions.

"Spilling the salt" and the ill omen that attaches to it are traceable to the last supper of Christ with his apostles, when it is said that Judas accidentally overturned the salt. Because of the after doom of the unfortunate traitor to spill the salt at table is an accepted sign of future ill luck to happen to the person doing it.

"Thirteen at table" and its unlucky significance originated at this event also. Christ and his twelve apostles dining together for the last time composed the number that has since been regarded with superstitious aversion, not only in the matter of dining, but in almost everything else as well.—What to Eat.

Japanese Fencing.

The Japanese sword is usually wielded with both hands. The cutting plays a much larger part in their sword play than the thrust and point. They also fence with two swords at once, the long, two handed weapon being held in the right hand, while the left uses the shorter and lighter blade. The fencer stands with his right foot forward and his sword held in both hands directly in front of him, its hilt at about the level of his waist, its point being at nearly the level of his opponent's eyes.

"DAY and NIGHT" ACHES

The incessant grind of the Kidney Back-ache soothed and cured by South American Kidney Cure—it never fails.

"Kidney Disease affected my back so that I couldn't work at all, and could not sleep for the pain. I used three bottles of South American Kidney Cure, and I can positively add another to the long list of cures that this great remedy claims, for I can work fourteen hours a day now and not feel tired. I had tried other treatments but got no help from them."
James Sullivan, Chatham.

It relieves in six hours. 46

Bamboo In China and Japan.

For centuries the Japanese and Chinese have raised the bamboo as a practical crop. The natives of tropical India and the Malay archipelago would be as much at a loss without it as the American farmer without his white pine, for they depend upon it not only for their chief building material, but for ropes, mats, kitchen utensils, etc.

The Ideal Beauty In Japan.

In the Japanese ideal of beauty these are the desired "points." Her face and figure, hands and feet and her nose must be long and narrow, her arms and limbs slender and her hips small. Broad hips are the one unpardonable sin. Few Japanese women measure five feet, so the length of the figure is relative.

No One Wants Them.

"Why is it," asked the philosopher, "that misfortunes never come singly?"

"Can't say," replied the other man, "unless it is that on account of the reception they get they're afraid to travel alone."

THE TORONTO FIRE.

No Reliable Conjecture As to Its Cause—Insurance Committee's Report.

Toronto, July 12.—The report on the conflagration of April 19 has been issued by the general insurance committee who adjusted the losses. The cause was not ascertained. The electrical appliances of the Currie building had been inspected four months previous and found in good order, and the use of an over-heated stove was denied by the firm. "After investigation," says the report, "It has been impossible to obtain any information upon which to base a reliable conjecture."

The total area fire swept was 19.7 acres, less street space, or 15.3 acres of block area, and 98 separate buildings were burned. All of these, with the exception of McLaughlin's stone flour mill, were of brick. No "fireproof" buildings were involved. Ordinary mercantile wooden joist construction prevailed.

The Losses.

There were 338 claims reported on, involving 2,043 policies. The total amount adjusted was $9,850,000, to which is added an estimate of $500,000 for losses to foreign unlicensed companies. Twenty per cent. of the loss was on buildings. The insurance loss was $8,200,000, plus, for unlicensed companies, $175,000, or, in all, $8,735,000, or 80 per cent. of the value of property destroyed. The 75 per cent. co-insurance clause was found in nearly all policies.

The velocity of the wind during the fire ranged from 25 miles, at 10 p. m., to 33 miles at 2 a.m. Friday, with a gust at 48 miles between 1 and 2 a.m.

Salvage Is Small.

The salvage was placed under the control of the Underwriters' Salvage Company of New York. Out of 41 ruins examined, only ten were found to yield anything worth handling, including seven wholesale dry goods houses, two wholesale hardware firms and one wholesale fur business. The sprinklers in the Brock building are held accountable for a good salvage.

The conflagration is the sixth in size in continental history, comparing:

1871—Chicago	$250,000,000
1872—Boston	70,000,000
1904—Baltimore	45,000,000
1892—St. John's Nfld....	15,000,000
1877—St. John, N.B....	13,500,000
1904—Toronto	10,350,000

Sheep for Mutton.

Mutton as a human food is gaining rapidly in reputation. So much improvement has been made in the methods of breeding, fattening, slaughtering and ripening mutton that a great army of people who were once prejudiced against it no longer find anything the matter with it. Good authorities predict that the time is rapidly approaching when as many sheep and lambs will be slaughtered in Canada as there are hogs and cattle slaughtered now. History shows us that in old countries mutton is the poor man's meat.

35 Years the Limit

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., July 12.—No man over 35 years applying for work on the Delaware and Hudson Railroad will be accepted in the future. The officials say that such a man is too old to learn railroading, and not active and vigorous enough for the hard work required.

THE SICKROOM MIRROR.

You Must Be Discreet In Allowing the Patient to Use It.

The looking glass, whether a plus or minus quantity, plays a more important part in the sickroom than most nurses and physicians give it credit for. The patient who is allowed to look into one is likely to be frightened into a relapse at sight of his cadaverous appearance, while the one who is not allowed to look is similarly affected by the refusal, which he attributes to the fact that his face is too much for his nerves.

"All things considered, I think it a good plan to give a sick person a chance to look at himself occasionally," said a doctor. "Of course the indulgence must be granted with discretion. If a patient is really looking seedy a turn at the looking glass is equivalent to signing his death warrant, but if taken at a time when braced up by some stimulant or a natural ebullition of vital force a few minutes of communion with his own visage beats any tonic I can prescribe. It thrills the patient with new hope. It makes him feel that he isn't quite so far gone as he had thought and that possibly a fight for life is, after all, worth while.

"Being thus sensitive, a persistent withholding of a mirror convinces the patient that he must be too horrible for contemplation, and he promptly decides that the best thing for him to do is to give up the ghost and get out of the way. That is one mistake hospitals were apt to make up to a few years ago. When I was a young fellow, getting my first practice after graduation, I served on the staff of several hospitals, and in all, especially in the free wards, those aids to vanity were strictly forbidden. The deprivation went hard with many of the patients, particularly the women, and when I came to have a little authority among doctors and nurses I advised a judicious application of looking glass treatment. I still advise it both in hospital and private practice, for I find that a little reassurance as to the state of the complexion and the appearance in general goes a long way toward effecting a cure."

NUT VALUES.

Chestnuts are starchy and take the place of potatoes.

Brazil or cream nuts are very rich in fat and should be blended with pecans, English walnuts or hazelnuts.

Black and white walnuts as well as hickory nuts contain nitrogen and oil, but no starch. Blend with rice or potatoes.

Cocoanuts contain very little nitrogen, but are rich in oil. The fiber is difficult of digestion. The cream and milk are excellent for salads and sauces.

Peanuts are very rich in nitrogen and contain considerable starch and oil. When boiled and mashed they are much better than when roasted and ground.

Almonds are really digesters or appetizers. They are too expensive to be used alone in large quantities. Four or five thoroughly masticated at the end of a meal will frequently aid in the digestion of other foods.

The Man and the Match.

"Show me two men with unlighted cigarettes, and if I watched them for a minute I can tell you correctly whether the one who has the match is from Philadelphia, Boston or New York."

The speaker was a person of some observation, and his friend naturally asked:

"How can you tell?"

"In this way," said the observant man. "If the man is a Philadelphian he will strike the match, hold it for his friend to get a light, then take a light himself and throw the match away. If he is a Bostonian he will light his own cigarette first, then hold the match for his friend and after that throw it away. If he is a New Yorker, however, he will strike the match, light his own cigarette and throw the match away."

Spencer and Music.

Mr. Herbert Spencer cultivated what he called the "receptive sense" in respect to music and was wont to speak with more than a little bitterness of the general desire to be a performer. One performer who had been chosen to play Beethoven for him was thunderstruck on arrival at Mr. Spencer's residence at being asked to render an extract from one of Sullivan's operas. Light music had a charm for the philosopher which light literature never had.

An Apt Pupil.

Teacher—James, you were late yesterday morning. Pupil—Yes; but, as you were saying to the class today, we should let bygones be bygones. Teacher—But have you no excuse to offer? Pupil—In that same talk you said that one who was good at excuses was usually good at nothing else. Under the circumstances I think it better for me not to do anything that will lower me in your estimation.

A Reminder.

Mother—Johnny, on your way home from school stop at the store and get me a stick of candy and a bar of soap. Father—What do you want of a stick of candy? Mother—That's so he'll remember the soap.

No Chance For Him.

"Come on; have a game of poker!"

"I don't believe in games of chance."

"That need make no difference. Come on and play."

Journalism.

Reporter—Senator Bilkins has absolutely nothing to say. Editor—Well, boil it down. We are terribly crowded tonight.—Puck.

Private Office, Bridge St., Belleville, opposite the Post Office.

Residence, first house east of W. T. Chown's Mfg. Co., Station St. Appointments made.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) it, and put in the background where you said you first saw me."

"It was nice of you to think of making the change," he replied quickly, "and I am very glad you did. I wanted it to portray you as I first saw you."

A faint flush came into her face. As she was watching the fire he studied the sweet face turned half away. And what a charming profile it was, with rounded chin, delicate patrician nose and long eyelashes just touching the cheek that bore a telltale flush! Was that faint color due to the fire or to his words? Then they dropped into a pleasant chat about trifles, and the ocean's voice kept up its rhythm, the fire sparkled, and the small cottage clock ticked the happy moments away.

"How is Mrs. Leach?" he asked at last. "Does she pray as fervently at every meeting?"

"Just the same," replied Telly, "and always will as long as she has breath. It is, as father says, her only consolation."

"I have thought of that evening many times since," he continued, "and the impression that poor old lady made on me with her piteous supplication. I wonder how it would affect a Boston church congregation some evening to have such an appearing figure, clad as she was, rise and utter the prayer she did. It would startle them, I think."

"I do not think Mrs. Leach would enter one of your city churches," responded Telly, "and certainly not clad as she has to be. She has a little pride even if she is poor."

"Oh, I meant no reflection, only the scene was so impressive I wondered how it would affect a fashionable church gathering. I think it would do them good to listen to a real sincere prayer that came from some one's heart and was not manufactured for the occasion. Those who wear fine silks and broadcloth and sit in cushioned pews seldom hear such a prayer as she uttered that night."

Then as Telly made no response he sat in silence a few moments mentally contrasting the girl with those he had met in Boston.

And what a contrast!

This girl clad in a gray dress severe in its simplicity and so ill fitting that it really detracted from the beautiful outlines of her form. Her luxuriant tresses were braided and coiled low on the back of her head, and at her throat a tiny bow of blue. Not an ornament of any nature, not even a ring, only the crown of her sunny hair, two little rose leaves in her cheeks and the queenlike majesty of throat and shoulders and bust, so classic that not one woman in a hundred but would envy her their possession.

And what a contrast in speech, expression and ways—timid to the verge of bashfulness, utterly unaffected and yet sincere, tender and thoughtful in each and every utterance, a beautiful flower grown to perfection among the rocks of this seldom visited island, untrained by conventionality and unsullied by the world! "I wonder how she would act if suddenly dropped into the Nasons' home, or what would Alice think of her." Then, as he noted the sad little droop of her exquisite lips, and as she, wondering at his silence, turned her pleading eyes toward him, there came into his heart in an instant a feeling that, despite her timidity and her lack of worldly wisdom, he would value her love and confidence far above any woman's he had ever met.

"Miss Terry," he said gently, "do you know I fancy that living here, as you have all your life, within sound of the sad sea waves, has woven a little of their melancholy into your nature and a little of their pathos into your eyes. I thought so the first time I saw you, and the more I see of you the more I think it is so."

"The ocean does sound sad to me," she said, "and at times it makes me feel blue. Then I am so much alone and have no one in whom to confide my feelings. Mother would not understand me, and if father thought I wasn't happy it would make him miserable." Then, turning her pathetic eyes full upon her questioner, she added: "Did you ever think, Mr. Page, that the sound of the waves might be the voices of drowned people trying to be heard? I believe every human being has a soul, and for all we know if they have gone down into the ocean their souls may be in the water and possibly are trying to speak to us."

"Oh, no, no, Miss Terry. That is all imagination on your part and due to your being too much alone with your own thoughts. The ocean of course has a sad sound to us all if we stop to think about it, but it's best not to. What you need is the companionship of some cheerful girl about your own age." Then he added thoughtfully: "I wish you could visit Alice for a few months. She would drive the megrims out of your mind."

"There is only one thing lacking."

"I should be glad to have her come and visit me. I am sure I should love her."

"I wish she could," he answered, "but she is a schoolteacher, and that duty keeps her occupied most of the time. I shall bring her down here next summer." Then, feeling it unfair to conceal the fact that he knew her history any longer, he said: "I beg your pardon, Miss Terry, but I know what is at the bottom of your melancholy moods, and I knew it the second night I was here last summer. Your father told me your history then."

"He did? You knew my unfortunate history that night?"

"I did, every word of it," he answered tenderly, "and I should have told you I did if I had not been afraid it would hurt you to know I knew it then."

Her eyes fell, and a look of pain came into her face.

"Please banish this mood from now on and never let it return," he said hastily. "I have come to tell you that in the near future the mystery of your life may be solved and, what is better, that a legacy awaits your claiming. The matter has been in the hands of an unprincipled lawyer for some months, as no doubt Mr. Terry has told you, but now he is dead, and I have taken hold of it and shall not rest until you have your rights. We shall know what your heritage is and all about your ancestors in a few months." Then he added tenderly, "Would it pain you to hear more about it, or would you rather not?"

"Father has told me a little of it, but I know he has kept most of the trouble to himself. It's his way. Since he came back from Boston he has acted like his old self, and no words can tell how glad I am. As for the money, it must and shall go to him, every penny of it, and all the comfort I can give him as long as he lives as well."

"I thank you for what you have said," said Albert quickly, "for now I shall dare to tell you another story before I go back. Not tonight," he added, smiling, as she looked at him curiously, "but you shall hear it in due time—up at the cove, maybe, if tomorrow afternoon is pleasant. I, too, am superstitious in some ways."

Perhaps to keep Telly from guessing what his story was he talked upon every subject that might interest her, avoiding the one nearest his heart. It came with a surprise when the little clock chimed 11, and he at once arose and begged her pardon for the possible trespass upon conventional hours. "You will go up to the cove with me?" he asked as he paused a moment at the foot of the stairs.

"I shall enjoy it very much, and I have a favor I want to ask of you, which is to let me make a sketch of you just where you sat the time your boat drifted away."

When he retired it was long after he heard the clock downstairs strike the midnight hour, and in his dreams he saw Telly's face smiling in the firelight.

CHAPTER XXXV.

"I'M goin' to give ye a taste o' mackerel fishin'," said Uncle Terry the next morning after breakfast. "We'll go over to the fish house, an' ye can put on some oilers an' save yer good clothes." On the way they met the well remembered old lady Albert had first noticed at the prayer meeting. She recognized him and, offering a rather soiled hand, for she had been spreading fish on the racks, exclaimed:

"In the Lord's name I thank ye, Mr. Page, fer rememberin' a poor old creetur like me an' sendin' that dress. I make sure the Lord's teched yer heart, an' if ye ain't a believer yet ye will be."

"I am glad my little remembrance pleased you," answered Albert pleasantly. "It was only a trifle, and you need not feel obligated for it." He kept on after Uncle Terry, not wishing to waste any time, but she followed to add more thanks, ending with, "God bless ye, sir, an' may he warm the heart o' one good girl, fer ye desarve it."

When he had donned a suit of oilers and Uncle Terry was pulling out of the little cove Albert said: "That old lady is the most pious person I ever met. No one could doubt she means every word she says."

"Waal, it's about all the consolation she gits out o' life, an' 'twixt you an' me, she takes more'n all the rest o' the believers here," answered Uncle Terry, "an' at times I 'most envy her fer it. She's sorter cracked 'bout religion; leastwise that's my notion, an' mebbe it's lucky she is, seein's she's poor an' nothin' but that fer comfort. She's smart 'nuff other ways, though, an' there ain't nothin' goin' on here she don't know. She's kind hearted, too, an' if she had anything ter give she'd share her last cent with ye. If ennybody's sick she's allus ready to help. Thar's lots o' wuss folks in the world than the Widder Leach." And then, as if that crowned the sum total of her virtues, he added, "Telly an' Lissy thinks lots o' her."

He paused for breath and, turning to see if they were heading right, resumed his strong and steady pulling.

"Thar," observed Uncle Terry, pointing to a long and narrow ledge, "is whar Telly started fer shore all alone just nineteen years ago last March." And then he added while he watched Albert's averted face. "'Twas an onlucky day fer the poor sailors an' a lucky one fer us, fer she's been a heap o' comfort ever since."

"Tell me, Uncle Terry, why it is she feels so sensitive regarding her history and what is the cause of the peculiar moods you spoke of last summer. I noticed it last evening, and it pained me very much."

"It's hard tellin'. She's a girl that's given ter broodin' a good deal, an' mebbe when she was told the facts she began ter suspect some o' her ancestors would be lookin' her up some day. She allus has been a good deal by herself sence she got her schoolin', an' most likely doin' lots o' thinkin'. But Telly's all right, an' the most willin' an' tender hearted creetur I ever seen or heard on. She'll make an amazin' good wife fer some man if she ever finds the right 'un."

When they reached the island Uncle Terry landed and, going to the top of a cliff, scanned the sea for signs of fish.

"Mackerel's cur'us fish," he observed to Albert, who had followed. "They's a good deal like some wimmin—ye never know whar ter find 'em. Yesterday mornin' that cove jest inside o' the p'int was 'live with 'em, an' today I can't see a sign o' one. We better sit here an' wait a spell till I sight a school."

To a dreamer like Albert Page the limitless ocean view he now enjoyed lifted him far above mackerel and their habits. His mind was also occupied a good deal by Telly, and while he desired to please the kindly old man, who imagined fishing would entertain him, his heart was not in it.

"Don't let us worry about the mackerel, Uncle Terry," he observed as they seated themselves on top of a cliff. "This lone, uninhabited island and the view here will content me until your fish are hungry."

"It allus sets me thinkin', too, an' wonderin' whar we cum from an' what we air here for. An' our stay is so amazin' short besides! We air born, grow up, work a spell, git old an' die, an' that's the end. Why, it don't seem only last year when I cum to the Cape, an' it's goin' nigh on to thirty now, an' I'm a'most through my spell o' life. What puzzles me is what's the good o' bein' born at all if ye've got ter die so soon! An', more'n all that, if life's the Lord's blessin', as the widder b'lieves, why are so many only born to suffer or be crippled all their lives? An' why are snakes an' all sorts o' vermin, to say nothin' o' cheatin' lawyers, like Frye, ever born at all?"

Albert smiled at the coupling of Frye with vermin. "There are a good many wiser heads than mine, Uncle Terry, that have never been able to answer your question," he replied, "and I doubt if they ever will. To my mind the origin of life is an enigma, the wide variations in matters of health and ability an injustice, and the end a blank wall that none who scales ever recrosses with tidings of the beyond. As some one has expressed it: 'Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities! We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry.'"

To be Continued.

THE OBSTINATE FLAME.

How to Extinguish a "Blower" by Letting Him Blow.

Of course you know what a "blower" is. The meaning that we have in mind is not to be found in the dictionary, but you are doubtless familiar with the term boaster, which is the same thing.

The next time you encounter him tell him that you don't believe he can blow out a candle placed only a foot from his experienced mouth without any other obstacle than his own breath between them.

If he accepts the challenge seat him comfortably at the table, place the lighted candle in front of him and, putting to his lips a large tin funnel, with the center of its mouth opposite and near the flame, tell him to blow through that.

THE FLAME DEFIES THE BLOWER.

He may blow until he becomes black in the face without extinguishing the candle. The harder he blows the more it doesn't go out.

After he has given it up say, "It is easy enough when you know how," put the funnel to your lips and blow out the candle. How? Simply by bringing the rim instead of the center near the flame.

When you blow through a funnel your breath spreads and follows the conical surface, leaving a region of dead calm in the center. Your friend blew all around the flame without touching it, but you extinguish it with a puff.

There are a good many queer things about air currents that would never have been thought of if they had not been found out by experience. This is one of them.—New York World.

Clever Sparrows.

One of the prettiest sights as regards seamen's pets was afforded by six sparrows which were tamed and trained by an old bluejacket on board a coal barge. He had trained them to such a degree that they would march in regular military order, "turning" and "wheeling" as desired by merely moving his hand. On each of their heads he had fastened a small piece of scarlet cloth, cut so as to form a cockscomb, which gave the birds a very saucy appearance as they went through their varied evolutions.

Animal Notes.

Naturalists tell us that sometimes a single beaver will go off and live by himself, leaving the colony to which he belonged. Whether these "bachelor beavers" have been put out of their native towns or leave of their own free wills we do not know.

A gentleman on one of our western ranches found a nest of young rabbits and took them in to his cat, supposing she would make a meal of them, but she surprised everybody concerned by adopting them and bringing them up along with her kittens.

Why They Want a Curl.

Do you wish to know why sister's friends ask you for a curl? Why Uncle Will tosses you up to the ceiling? Why all the grownup people talk with you and ask you questions? If you really want to know, dears, lean right close and you will hear that it is because they love you so and care so much for your good opinion. It is well for you to know how much you are loved. You will wish to be loving to others always, will you not?

Disappointed.

Clarence had been looking forward eagerly to his sixth birthday, and when it came his sister woke him up early in the morning. Clarence lay still a moment and then said in a tone of deep disappointment:

"Pshaw, I aren't a bit bigger!"

Had to Have the Material.

Jack—Mother, may I play making believe I'm entertaining another little boy? Mother—Yes, dear; of course. Jack—All right. Then will you please give me some cake for him?—Philadelphia Ledger.

In the Night.

Do you ever waken sometimes in the night,
When the room's all dark, except the queer, dim light
From the window, and you're turned about in bed,
And you can't tell where the foot is, nor the head?
And you sit up, scared, and look round everywhere,
But the door to mother's room just isn't there.
Oh, it's very bad, I know, because, you see,
It happens often just that way to me.

But then if I lie down again and wait,
Why, by and by just everything comes straight.
The bed stands in its old same place again,
The window's where I thought it was—and then,
Right over here, this side, is mother's door,
And then I don't feel frightened any more.
—Youth's Companion.

"AS BOLD AS A LION."

Rather Say Bold as a Partridge if You Would Be Exact.

The only explanation of the adage, "As bold as a lion," is that the lion's magnificent, muscular body, his noble head, great mane, the fact that he is a wild beast and—still more probably—his deep throated roar that sounds so extraordinarily bold have made him feared for generations. But the lion belongs to the family of cats and is not bold. To those who know best he is not brave even in the hour of danger. The lioness, who is smaller, less terrible to look upon and is without a mane, is brave in defense of her young, but she, too, is not bold. She is merely bolder than the lion. In comparison with any animal that can face danger and fight "fair" the lion is a coward. To prove it let us see for a moment how it is that the lion chooses to hunt his prey.

The lion does not hunt. In the reeds and grasses near some pool in the jungle he lies hidden where he knows that other animals will go to drink. Catlike, he leaps upon his victim, striking it with his powerful paws. Then his great jaws break the neck of the unfortunate creature he has taken by surprise, and the lion boldly carries off the carcass to devour it where he will. The folk who live on the outskirts of jungles in the lion's country sometimes lose their sheep and goats when a hungry lion can muster courage to go near a human habitation in his search for food. He goes at night and stealthily. Who knows but that his heart goes pit-a-pat and his big limbs tremble at every sudden noise? The natives of India and of Africa know, however, that they can frighten away a thieving lion by fire and torches. If cornered and forced to fight he will do battle savagely, but he doesn't seek an open fight, and any traveler will tell you that as a rule the "king of beasts" bolts on sighting a man.

To be as bold as a partridge—as brave, unselfish, daring, heroic, as a partridge—is something one might be proud to boast. No lion defends its young with the courage of a partridge. The lioness at bay will turn in defense of her cubs, will fight the enemy, will spring at him furiously; the partridge will leave its little ones quite unprotected in the nest, or wherever they may be in hiding, and will offer herself to spare them. It is not the unthinking heroism of excitement. The bird knows what she is doing and the danger. She schemes to attract attention to herself, but she manages to lead the dogs on, and she escapes. We at least have never heard anything in the life history of the partridge so sad as that the mother bird has been taken at that supreme moment. Under the very nose of the dogs she will flutter and limp, with drooping wing, to deceive them into the belief that she is lamed and cannot fly.

The King and the Preacher.

Dr. South on one occasion after preaching before Charles II., who, by the way, did not care any more than the humblest dissenter to listen to a read sermon, was twitted by the king of having read from a manuscript. "How is it, Dr. South," said his majesty, "that you, who are so famous for preaching without book, should read your sermon when you preach before me?" "May I answer your majesty with another question?" replied the witty doctor. "How is it that your majesty always reads your speeches to your faithful commons?" "Odsfish, doctor," said Charles, "because I have asked them for money so often that by this time I am ashamed to look them in the face." Dr. South, it must be admitted, had fairly laid himself open to the retort.

He Kept His Seat.

The nearsighted man, comfortably ensconced in the corner of the car, looked up at the woman who was holding a large bundle in one hand while she clung to the strap with the other.

"Madam," said he, a wave of sudden generosity sweeping over him, "I make it a rule never to give my seat up to any woman, but I will be glad to help you. Let me hold your bundle for you."

"Oh, thank you, sir," replied the fair passenger; "I hope you know how."

Whereupon she deposited a gurgling six-month-old infant in his lap, to the undisguised joy of the rest of the strap holders.

Monopolies In Old England.

Monopolies were quite common in England long before the days of the Stuarts, while it was under a Stuart, James I., that an act was passed declaring void all monopolies for the sole buying, selling and making of goods excepting patents for fourteen years for any new process or new manufacture. This indeed was the first step toward free trade. The Tudors were really the great creators of monopolies, and Elizabeth was the greatest developer of them.—All the Year Round.

Plain Enough.

"What was the trouble?"

"He couldn't swim."

"What has that to do with his failure?"

"He got into a company where the stock was all water."

The Paternal Idea.

Miss Roxley—I lost my heart last night, pa. I accepted Mr. Poorman. Mr. Roxley—Huh! You didn't lose your heart. You must have lost your head.

Spare Others.

"You talk an awful lot about yourself, Catherine."

"Well, it keeps me from talking about other people."

"Mirth is God's medicine," said Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Use Your Eyes Do Not Abuse Them.

Strength comes by use that trains out that does not strain. If there is a hint or a sign of strain, if there are spots before the eyes, at times, if there is a headache or pain about the eyes, if there is a dizziness or letters become double or mixed, then you are injuring your eyes every day. These defects may seem small, yet if left to themselves they will grow and the only thing that will stop them is proper glasses, that is the kind we give. We give the examination that can leave no defect undiscovered. Consultation free.

FAMOUS

THE INTELLIGENCER is printed and published for The Intelligencer Printing and Publishing House (Limited) by CHARLES JAMES BOWELL, of the City of Belleville, in the County of Hastings, Province of Ontario, at their Office, No. 403, Front Street, Belleville, Ont.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

In Our Front Store

We are now arranging for Especial Summer Sales.

Table sales—everybody knows when we put on a sale or series of sales the effort is a worthy one.

Smoothing Trouble at Sea.

"Once, crossing the Atlantic," said an old traveler, "a tremendous row arose among the sailors. They fought down in the forecastle like a pack of wild beasts. Luncheon was going on at the time, and the first officer left the table to see if he could quell the disturbance.

"He had only been gone a little while when the hubbub began to die down. Everything was quiet when he returned. The captain called across the saloon to him in an approving tone:

"'Things seem to be smoother now.'

"'Yes,' returned the first officer; 'we have ironed the sailors, sir.'"

Minerva and the Flute.

A recent historian suggests a reason why the flute is not popular with ladies. "Minerva in ancient Greece," he says, "began to play the flute, thinking it such a beautiful instrument she needs must learn it. But one day, looking in a mirror while she was playing, she saw to her horror that the act of blowing the flute communicated a very inelegant distortion to her face, and in a pet she threw the instrument away. Perhaps the feelings of the fair sex toward the flute have been insensibly influenced by a similar consideration."

Inquisitive Girls.

Bessie—I almost hate Carrie Dyer! She asks such impudent questions, you know. I was telling her if Frank Barnes had asked me to marry him once he had asked me twenty times, and she had the impertinence to ask me if he had asked once. Minnie—The idea! But has he, Bessie?

Knew the Brand.

"Is that a Landseer, Mr. Crœsus? asked the visitor, pausing before the painting.

"No," replied the host; "reckon it is a Durham. See how broad it is between the horns, and see the color and curl on its forehead. That's a genuine Durham sure."

Nothing to Speak Of.

Miss Skrawney (giggling)—Mr. Kidder is such a flatterer. Miss Ascum—What has he been saying to you? Miss Skrawney—Oh, tee hee! He's so gallant! He told me I had arms like the Venus de Milo!

Painting His Cows.

Silas—What is old Rube so hot about? Cyrus—Why, an artist asked if he could paint his cows. Silas—That did not hurt the cows, did it? Cyrus—Yes, by heck; he painted a sarsaparilla sign on each one.

Heartless.

Marie—He broke her heart, the wretch. Celeste—Did he jilt her? Marie—No, he insisted on her keeping her engagement when she had a better offer.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This remedy is certain to be needed in almost every home before the summer is over. It can always be depended upon even in the most severe and dangerous cases. It is especially valuable for summer disorders in children. It is pleasant to take and never fails to give prompt relief. Why not buy it now? It may save a life. For sale by all druggists.

Orders for bookbinding should be left at this office. It is surprising how nice a volume can be made of these magazines, even though they are somewhat soiled from much handling. Books, magazines or periodicals bound or rebound in any style at very reasonable prices. Blank books, such as journals, ledgers, day books, with any kind of ruling, made to order. All work warranted first-class. THE INTELLIGENCER. Belleville

Change of copy for advertisements in The Weekly Intelligencer must be in this office on Friday mornings to ensure their appearance in the issue of the following week. 322d&wtf

The Intelligencer, during July and August, will be printed on Saturdays at one o'clock.

Oddities of La Fontaine.

La Fontaine, the famous French poet and writer of fables, was a notable example of the eccentricity of genius. When he lost his entire fortune, a lady, who was one of his best friends and an ardent admirer of his works, hastened in alarm and distress to find him. She met him in the street, penniless and cheerful.

"You must come to our home," she said.

"I was going there," he replied, and then began a visit which prolonged itself into years, during which La Fontaine never seemed to be troubled by a thought that he was dependent. Nor did the lady or her family have any other feeling than one of delight and pride that he made his home with them.

Some one adopted one of his sons when the child was a baby. Knowing that the boy was in good hands, he seemed to forget all about him. Years afterward at a dinner party he met a young man whose wit and charm of manner pleased him greatly.

"Why, that is your son!" he was told.

"Indeed! I am pleased to hear it," was his remarkable reply.

The Prairie Dog.

An old cherished superstition about the prairie dog is thus ruthlessly brushed aside in the American Natural History by William T. Hornaday:

It is not true that the prairie dog lives in peace and harmony in the same burrow with the rattlesnake and burrowing owl. The snakes would make short work of the young prairie dogs, and the latter would quickly kill the owl! It is safe to surmise that when a deadly and quarrelsome rattler invades the home of a prairie dog family the latter speedily seeks a home elsewhere. The burrowing owl is in the habit of taking refuge in abandoned burrows and nesting in them to save the labor of digging a burrow for itself. In the Philadelphia Geological garden Mr. A. E. Brown once tried the experiment of associating burrowing owls and prairie dogs. The owls were immediately killed and torn to pieces by the dogs.

Ferdinand.

The first half of this word is feorh, "youth" or "life." The second half is a little uncertain, but may be conjectured to be probably nanth, "daring." It was the Spanish Goths who gave it its earliest vogue in the peninsula as Fernando or Fernan. San Fernando, king of Castile, sent it on to Aragon and thence to Naples, where it became Ferdinando and figures in "The Tempest" accordingly as Ferdinand. With Ferdinand and Isabella its fame grew worldwide. Again, in Spain itself it became Hernando and Hernan, in which last shape it was immortalized by Cortes. Who would have suspected the conqueror of Mexico of bearing a name which on analysis turns out to be pure Anglo-Saxon?

Losing a Couple of Anchors.

"It makes me weary," said the skipper of a clipper ship just in from South America, "to buy a newspaper just after I have landed and read that my vessel suffered no loss from the storm except slipping a couple of anchors. How many persons who read that know that ships' anchors are sold by the pound and that each pound costs from 5 to 7 cents? I carried two 5,000 pound anchors and the loss of them means that I am out $600. That wipes the profit of a voyage in double quick time, doesn't it? Some folks talk about ship anchors as though they didn't cost more than marlinspikes."

Lovemaking In Borneo.

When a dyak of Borneo makes love he helps the girl in the hardest portion of her daily toil. If she smiles upon him, no matter how sweetly, he does not immediately respond, but waits until the next dark night. Then he steals to her house and wakens her as she lies asleep beside her parents. The parents, if they approve, make no sign, but sleep on or pretend to. If the girl accepts she rises and takes from her lover the betel and sweetmeats he has brought her. That seals their betrothal, and he departs as he came, neither speaking nor being spoken to.

A Literary Curiosity.

Here is a literary curiosity: "Sator arepo tenet opera rotas." It is curious because it spells the same words backward as forward. The first letter of each word placed consecutively spells the first word, the second letter of each spells the second word, and so on. The last letters read backward spell the last word, the next to the last letters the next to the last word, and so on throughout. There are also as many letters in each word as there are words in the sentence.

Warm Prospect.

Mr. Hardnut—I admit, sir, that my life has not been what it should be, but I truly and unselfishly love your daughter, and if ever I give her a moment's pain I hope I'll be made to suffer torture for it. Old Gentleman (warmly)—Oh, you will. You don't know her.

Fishing Downstream.

The fish always lie with their noses upstream and their eyes looking for what the water brings down. Therefore be natural and send the lure down as the real fly would come.—Outing.

Cupid's Rehearsal.

He—You didn't seem startled when I proposed to you. She—No; I have so often dreamed that you proposed to me.

Sunshine Furnace

Regulated Like a Watch.

The fire in the Sunshine Furnace can be regulated as accurately as a watch.

At night shake down the ashes, replenish the coal, allow time for the gas to burn off, close your drafts—that's all.

Then, in the morning slip into the hall, open the drafts, and in a few minutes you'll have a rapid, house-warming fire—no exasperating, freezing waits; no firing up, nor risk of the fire burning out during the night.

The Sunshine Furnace is a scientific heater and fuel-saver from top to bottom.

Sold by all enterprising dealers. Write for booklet.

A FAMILY NECESSITY

Is a remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back—use Nerviline; it's more penetrating, pain subduing and powerful than any other liniment. Nerviline is at least five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be over-estimated. For man or beast Nerviline is a panacea for all pain and costs only 25c per bottle. Buy Nerviline to-day.

ACCIDENT AT POINT ANN.

MR. MARSHALL GEROW SUSTAINS SERIOUS INJURIES.

A serious accident yesterday afternoon befel Mr. Marshall Gerow, who, by the way, is the popular bugle-major of the Fifteenth Regimental Bugle Band. He was working at Point Ann assisting in placing some of the framework in position, when he missed his footing and fell a distance of about 30 feet. The result was a dislocation of the right ankle, back hurt and cuts and bruises about the body. The unfortunate young man was brought to the hospital, where his injuries were attended to.

A FREE TRIP TO ST. LOUIS

This would please most people greatly, but there would be little pleasure in it if you did not take along a box of "Foot Elm." This is the remedy that Col. ECZEMA ON LITTLE GIRL

Sleepless Nights for Mother and Awful Suffering of Child.

CURED BY CUTICURA

Had Given up All Hope of Ever Making Any Cure.

"My little girl has been suffering for two years or more from eczema, and during that time I could not get a night's sleep, as her ailment was very severe.

"I had tried so many remedies and spent much money, deriving no benefit, I had absolutely given up all hope of making any cure. But as a last resort I was persuaded to try a set of the Cuticura remedies, and to my great delight a marked change was manifested from the first application. I gave the child a bath with Cuticura Soap, using a soft piece of muslin cloth. This I did twice a day, each time following with the Cuticura Ointment, and at the same time gave the Resolvent, according to directions. One box of the Ointment and two bottles of the Resolvent, together with the Soap, effected a permanent cure. I submit this for publication if you desire, hoping it will add to your success and assist so many thousands of sufferers in curing themselves." MRS. I. B. JONES, ADDINGTON, IND. T.

The first step in the treatment of the chronic forms is to remove the scales and crusts and soften the skin, by warm baths with Cuticura Soap. The scalp, ears, elbows, hands, ankles and feet will require frequently a thorough soaking in order to penetrate the thickened skin and crusts with which these parts are often covered. Dry carefully, and apply Cuticura Ointment, lightly at first, and where advisable spread it on pieces of soft cloth and bind in place. Take the Resolvent, pills or liquid, in medium doses. Do not use cold water in bathing, and avoid cold, raw winds.

Cuticura Resolvent, liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 5 Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; Boston, 137 Columbus Ave. Potter Drug & Chemical Corp., Sole Proprietors. SHOT WHILE FALLING.

Constable Tisdale's Explanation of Hitting Hotelman Swartz.

Woodstock, July 12.—Yesterday morning the Embro shooting case came up in the local police court and occupied the whole day. The first charge dealt with was that against William Swartz for assaulting his wife and using threatening language. Defendant first pleaded not guilty, but afterwards withdrew the plea and one of guilty was entered. He was fined $5 and costs or $17.65 in all.

High Constable Tisdale was then charged with shooting with intent to do grevious bodly harm. Swartz, the victim, was the first witness called and stated he was running away, with Tisdale pursuing him, when the shot was fired and went into his left leg below the knee. After he was shot he ran through several back yards, when he was finally stopped by Chief Zeats. Tisdale then came up and put handcuffs on him. They then went to Dr. Sutherland's, where they awaited his coming. Tisdale expressed his sorrow at having shot plaintiff. The bullet was searched for, but not found. In cross-examination, Swartz admitted he had been making preparations to leave Embro.

Dr. Sutherland stated Swartz's wound was a typical shotgun wound and confirmed Swartz's statement that Tisdale had expressed regret. "It was an unwise thing," he said, "to drive the man 10 miles in the condition he was in."

For the defence Constable Tisdale gave his version of the occurrence and stated he intended to shoot in the air, but fell and it was then the weapon was discharged. The shooting, the witness said, was merely accidental.

BISLEY MATCHES BEGUN.

Staff-Sergeant Crowe of Guelph Scores 49 Out of 50.

Bisley Rifle Range, July 12.—(C. A.P.)—The annual meeting of the National Rifle Association opened yesterday morning under favorable auspices. This association was founded in 1860 (incorporated by royal charter 1890) to give permanence to volunteer corps and to encourage rifle shooting throughout the King's Dominions.

In the J. H. Steward Challenge Cup competition yesterday afternoon Pte. Neil Smith of the 21st Regiment, Stewart, put on a score of 34 out of a possible 35.

In the Gregory he made the same score.

In the Alexander Martin competition, Staff-Sergt C. R. Crowe of the 30th Regiment, Guelph, scored as follows: 4 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5—49. Immediately following this he put on a score of 12 bullseyes.

In the Gregory unsquadded competition, open to all-comers, seven shots at 200 yards, Lance-Sergt. W. G. Fowlers, 12th Regiment, Toronto, scored 33 out of a possible 35.

The Canadian team yesterday visited Bisley churchyard and laid a wreath on Major Perley's grave.

Montreal, July 12.—Montreal's unprecedented summer mortality still continues. The civic return for last week shows 217 deaths of which 133 were children under one year old. Infantile diseases were responsible for 131 of these deaths. This is regarded as a terrible mortality.

MILITIA BILL IN HOUSE

Minister of Militia Explains the Changes It Proposes.

Follows Example of the Imperial Government, Establishes a Militia Council, and Dispenses With a General Officer Commanding—Mr. Gourley and Mr. Bourassa Develop a Wordy Argument—New Corps Officers to Be Selected By Government.

Ottawa, July 12.—In the House of Commons yesterday the new militia bill was discussed. It provides for the reorganiztion of the militia system, the establishment of a militia council and making other important changes in the organization of the militia.

The debate developed a wordy argument between Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Gourley and gave the latter a chance to air his well-known views on military matters.

Sir Frederick Borden, in explaining his bill, said that he proposed following the example of the Imperial Government and establishing a militia council corresponding with the British army council, composed, first, of the Minister of Militia, who would be chairman of the council, with four military men, viz., the chief of the general staff, who will be the principal officer; the adjutant-general, the quartermaster-general and the master-general of ordnance and two additional civilians, probably the Deputy Minister and Chief Accountant of the Department. In this way the minister would be in touch with the whole militia system. The position of the general officer commanding would be dispensed with under the bill, the council being largely in substitution of that office.

No Interference.

Upon the caluse making the Minister of Militia responsible for the administration of militia affairs, A. Ingram urged that there should be no interference in any form by the minister, who must necessarily be a political head, in the administration of the militia. Sir Frederick Borden agreed that there should be absolutely no political interference in promotion in the various corps, and challenged the Opposition to show that he had ever interfered in such matters. But when a new corps was being organized it was an entirely different proposition. In such cases in England, when a new corps is being organized, it is the custom that the officers are selected by the officers of the Government. In Canada since Confederation the same practice had been followed.

Commissions in Militia.

To the clause respecting relative rank, the Minister added a sub-clause to the effect that officers of the Imperial army when on temporary service in Canada shall be granted commissions in the Canadian militia equivalent to their rank in the Imperial army. This provision met with the approval of Major Fowler and other members. There was quite a discussion on the clause dealing with officers' uniforms, and, in reply to suggestions, the Minister expressed the hope that before very long there would be adopted a sensible and serviceable uniform of a distinctly Canadian type.

The clause respecting drill and training was amended to read: "The Governor-in-Council may order the active militia or any portion thereof to drill or train for a period of not more than thirty days in each year."

By this change the words "Governor-in-Council" were substituted for "His Majesty," and the minimum 12 days' drill was struck out.

In the clause relating to pay of privates in the militia, the rate was fixed at 50 cents per day, which rate may be increased as may be prescribed, but not to exceed $1, with $1 per day for each horse.

The 67th clause relating to drill camps was passed without amendment.

Political Interference.

Some instances of political interference with the Militia were pointed out by Dr. Daniel of St. John, N. B. He cited a case when a contract for gun platforms and other military supplies was given to a grocer who was a good Liberal. Also he cited that Lieut.-Col. J. R. Armstrong of St. John, when he retired from the active militia, was not given honorary rank, although such rank was given to Lieut.-Col. Tucker, M.P., when he retired. The difference between the two men was that the latter was a Liberal and the former a Conservative.

Sir Frederick Borden defended the Government's conduct regarding the gun platforms by saying that it was a small matter. As to the case of Col. Armstrong, he declined to enter into it, further than to declare that politics had nothing to do with it.

Seed Growers' Association.

Hon. Sydney Fisher introduced his bill respecting the incorporation of the Seed Growers' Association. In reply to a request for an explanation, Mr. Fisher stated that the measure simply authorized the formation of seed growers' associations along the same line as live stock associations.

At the minister's suggestion the House rose at 10.30.

The Prolific Scale.

The total number of descendants from one individual of the San Jose scale during the time between the middle of June and the last of November has been calculated at 3,216,080,400. As all these millions obtain their food by sucking the sap from the plant they are on it is not to be wondered at that a tree which in the spring was apparently in good condition may be nearly or entirely dead by fall.

Interested.

"Do you admire Beethoven's works?" "I never visited 'em," answered Mr. Cumrox absentmindedly. "What does he manufacture?"—Washington Star.

G.T.P. INVESTIGATION.

Judge Winchester Has About 20 Witnesses to Appear at Toronto.

Toronto, July 12.—To-morrow morning Judge Winchester will take evidence here concerning the G.T.P. alien labor trouble. About twenty witnesses will be called, including applicants who were refused positions and experts in Canadian ability. Among those subpoenaed are Harry Crewe, Cecil B. Smith of Niagara Falls, R. W. Leonard of St. Catharines, chief engineer of the Hamilton, St. Catharines and Niagara Electric Railway; T. E. Millman of Hamilton; Joseph Hobson, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk; E. Boucher of North Bay; Arthur H. N. Bruce of Lindsay, now of the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pentypool Railway, who applied for a position on the G.T.P. surveys, but was refused; James McDougall, engineer of the County of York; William Mackenzie, president of the Toronto Railway Company, and E. H. Keating, manager of the Toronto Railway.

NO HITCH.

Premier Bond Expresses An Opinion on the French Convention.

London, July 12.—Sir Robert Bond declares there is no hitch in the Newfoundland negotiations; all his transactions with the Foreign Colonial Offices were of the most cordial character. Some of the French papers were alarmed as to what he was reported to have said on the subject of Newfoundland. He never made such a statement beyond saying that he was satisfied with the convention. Several times he had been approached by French journalists, but had refused to talk.

It was an absurd rumor that Newfoundland declined to accept the convention. It had received marked favor in the colony except from the Opposition, which try to make political capital of it. He repeated that his Government thought the colony might have received more, but was very much pleased with the results obtained.

WITHOUT AMMUNITION.

Lethbridge Mounted Police Stores Burned Up Monday Morning.

Winnipeg, July 12.—What might have proved a disastrous conflagration broke out here at 8 o'clock yesterday morning at the mounted police barracks at Lethbridge. The fire must have made considerable headway before discovery, for when the alarm was sounded a dense mass of smoke was issuing from the building containing the orderly-room, offices and quartermaster's stores. Fortunately there was no wind, otherwise the entire barracks and stables would have been consumed. The entire stock of arms and ammunition, of which there were nearly one million rounds, groceries, saddles, blankets and general stores, together with all records of the division, were entirely destroyed.

BRANDISHED A BUTCHER KNIFE.

Annoyed Women Near Bowmanville and Is Locked Up.

Bowmanville, July 12.—Harry Knight, who says he is a pressman in the tin works, Montreal, and formerly of Cleveland, and who was tramping back to the American side, entered the home of E. C. Benan near Newcastle yesterday.

After locking some of the doors he started chasing the women of the household with a butcher knife. The women fled to the field, where men were at work.

The men captured him and brought him to Bowmanville, where he is now a guest at the town jail. He will appear before Police Magistrate Horsey to-day. He is either mentally deranged or laboring under delirium tremens.

Charged With Theft.

St. Catharines, July 12.—Henry Sevenpiper, wanted on a charge of stealing $96 from Farmer Jacob Henberger, near Jordan, was captured at Lindonville, N. Y., by High Constable Boyle and brought here. Sevenpiper worked three days for Honberger and then disappeared. The same day $96 of $207 which the farmer kept in a drawer in the house disappeared. Sevenpiper's whereabouts were ascertained through a letter he wrote to a sister here. He denies the theft, but he had bought a gold watch and had been spending money freely in Lindonville.

Killed at Shawville.

Ottawa, July 12.—George Towell, one of the pioneers of Clarendown township, was fatally injured in a runaway accident at Shawville, dying an hour after he was hurt. Mr. Towell came into town on business and left his horses standing on the street. They took fright and bolted down the roadway. Mr. Towell ran out and endeavored to catch the lines. He fell beneath the wagon, however, and the wheels passed over his head and body.

Vancouver Released.

Montreal, July 12.—The Dominion Line steamer Vancouver, which ran aground in the river below Sorel on July 1, has finally been successfully floated. After dredging the river about the steamer, the force of five tugs was required to pull the steamer off the mud banks. The Vancouver came up to Montreal under her own steam, and, after taking on a cargo, will sail at once for Liverpool. The steamer is not damaged.

Rivals Channel Fleet.

London, July 12.—The arrival of the German squadron at Plymouth has created an excellent impression here. The Daily Mail's naval expert, who is one of the best specialists in his line in England, says the squadron is "incontestably superior in fighting qualities to the British home and channel fleets as now constituted."

MEN'S DISEASES

There is seldom a day that we are not consulted in regard to a condition that, if we were to have seen it in its early stages, the sufferer would have been relieved, cured and saved considerable expense. This we consider is due to lack of knowledge on the part of the doctor who has previously treated the case; therefore, we say to you, if you are suffering from any disease or condition peculiar to men, or if you have been a victim and been disappointed in not getting a permanent cure elsewhere, we would ask that you come to our office for personal examination or write us for a Question Blank for Home Treatment. We will explain to you OUR SYSTEM OF TREATMENT, which we have originated and developed after our whole life's experience in the treatment of special diseases of men. We will give you, FREE OF CHARGE, an honest and scientific opinion of your case. If we find you are incurable we will honestly tell you so. If we find your case curable we will give you a written guarantee to cure you or refund you your money.

—YOU CAN PAY WHEN CURED—

We cure NERVOUS DEBILITY, VARICOCELE, STRICTURES, BLOOD and SKIN diseases, PROSTATIC troubles, BLADDER, KIDNEY and URINARY diseases.

Ten Jurymen to Two.

Brockville, July 13.—The jury on the inquest touching the death of G. Miller, the trackman, killed on the Grand Trunk Railway by an express, returned a verdict after a long and stormy deliberation. Miller was driving over a crossing, and many witnesses testified that the engineer gave no warning signal. This was rebutted by the engineer and train crew. Ten of the twelve jurymen returned a verdict placing the responsibility for Miller's death on the engine crew, the other two dissenting.

Wheat Heading Out.

MANY CELEBRATIONS OF THE GLORIOUS TWELFTH.

Rain No Deterrent to Orangemen and Walk Was Best Ever

Celebrations of the 214th Anniversary of the Battle of Boyne Water Were Held in Many Places—Grand Master Dr. Sproule, M.P., Was at Woodstock—Speeches Made By Prominent Orangemen at All Points.

Toronto, July 13.—The "Glorious Twelfth" was ushered in by a violent thunderstorm early yesterday morning, during which rain fell in torrents, and not till 11.30 did the rain cease and the weather begin to look cheerful. The Observatory official said at noon that 1.03 inches of rain fell during the downpour, which was considered unusually heavy. He added that thunderstorms were general throughout Western Ontario, and accompanied a low area which moved across the lower lakes from the south.

Celebrated the 1th.

But the County Orange Lodge of Toronto and Orangemen from Buffalo, Hamilton, Humber Bay and Mimico celebrated the glorious victory of William III., the Prince of Orange, in 1690, at the battle of the Boyne, all the same. The rain had just about ceased when the procession moved off just about 12 o'clock. The parade was undoubtedly the finest ever held on the Twelfth in Toronto. Everywhere the Orangemen were greeted with cheers. It is estimated that about 3,500 were in line.

8,000 at Exhibition.

The march culminated at the Exhibition grounds, where there were 8,000 people assembled to hear the speeches. County Master Fred Dane presided, and speeches were made by Mayor Urquhart, Grand County Master Harper of Hamilton, R. W. Master John McMillan, Rev. E. C. Laker, chaplain of Toronto East District, and Grand Treasurer E. F. Clarke, M.P. After the speeches a program of sports was successfully run through.

CELEBRATIONS ELSEWHERE.

Woodbridge, July 13.—West York and Peel celebrated the glorious twelfth here. There were over 1,500 people in line, the procession being over half a mile in length. The speakers were County Master Peter Ellis, J. W. St. John, M.P.P.; Rev. Newton Hill, King City; R. O. Harvey, Laskey; A. R. Hassard, Rev. Peter Campbell, J. J. Mahaffy, and W. Bro. George Syne.

At Woodstock.

Woodstock, July 13.—The 12th of July gathering for 1904 included nearly all the lodges of Oxford, Brant, Middlesex, Elgin and Norfolk. Addresses suitable to the occasion were delivered by Rev. Canon Farthing and Dr. Sproule, M.P., Grand Master of the Grand Lodge.

2,000 at Owen Sound.

Owen Sound, July 13.—The Orange demonstration here yesterday was a notable affair, in which nearly two thousand uniformed members of the order participated, and which was witnessed by more than twenty thousand people. Fifty lodges were present and thirty-five standards were in line. Among the prominent speakers of the afternoon were J. L. Hughes, inspector of public schools, Toronto; Alexander Muir, author of "The Maple Leaf;" T. I. Thomson, M.P.; Past County Master Gordon and Rural Dean J. Ardill.

Nesbitt at Orangeville.

Orangeville, July 13.—Between 6,000 and 7,000 people celebrated the glorious 12th in Orangeville this year. Twenty-six lodges with flying regalia, Brampton and Markdale bands, and a large number of fife and drum bands, participated in an imposing procession. The orator of the day was Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, M. P. P. for North Toronto. There were many other speakers.

The Day at Wingham.

Wingham, July 13.—After dinner the huge procession was marshalled with nearly sixty lodges in line, and over 1,000 Orangemen in the ranks. Addresses were delivered by Bro. Dr. J. Bradley of Bervie, Bro. Rev. R. Hobbs, president of the London Conference; Rev. Jos. Philp, B. D., of Kincardine, and Rev. Wm. Lowe, provincial grand chaplain.

Corner Stone Laid.

Kingston, July 13.—Orangemen of this city and district assembled at Battersea at 12 o'clock yesterday. There were 3,000 present in a grove, where dinner was had. After this they went to the village, where the corner stone of a new Orange hall was laid.

Gathered at Thorold.

St. Catharines, July 13.—The Orangemen of Lincoln, Welland, Haldimand and Monck Counties gathered at Thorold yesterday to do honor to the glorious Twelfth. At 1 o'clock a procession of the local and visiting Orangemen and True Blues formed at the Market Square and marched through the principal streets, making a brave showing. Addresses were delivered by Mayor William Munro, various clergymen of the town, and William Williams.

Rain Spoiled It.

Arnprior, July 13.—A heavy downpour of rain, which continued at intervals all day, disorganized to a great extent the celebration of the glorious Twelfth, held here yesterday. Orangemen from Ottawa, Billings' Bridge and New Edinburgh, assembled here. A program of speeches and sports had been arranged in the McLachlin Grove. But for the rain a pleasant day would have been spent. At Braeside, a village some three miles from here, a district celebration was held, the lumber mills there and here being closed to allow the employes to participate.

Celebration at Tara.

Tara, July 13.—The Twelfth of July celebration held here yesterday was not up to previous years in point of numbers, on account of unsatisfactory railway arrangements. From 1,00 to 2,000 people were in attendance. Patriotic speeches were delivered by Lieut.-Col. Belcher of Southampton, John George of Port Elgin, Rev. Mr. Atkins, Rev. Mr. McLean and Rev. Mr. Diepl of Tara.

Up in Windsor.

Windsor, July 13.—About 1,500 Orangemen from the Counties of Essex, Kent, Elgin and Lambton gathered here yesterday to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. A street parade almost a mile in length was held at noon, and in the afternoon the gathering was addressed by members of Parliament, clergy and prominent members of the order.

The Day at Finch.

Cornwall, July 13.—The anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated at Finch yesterday under the auspices of Stormont County Orange Lodge. Every subordinate lodge in the county was well represented. Addresses were delivered by prominent orangemen and clergymen.

Great Day at Peterboro.

Peterboro, July 13.—The largest crowd of people which has gathered in Peterboro for years assembled here yesterday, when the Orangemen of this and the surrounding districts had a monster demonstration. Forty-six lodges were largely represented from the Counties of South Victoria, West Northumberland, Durham and Peterboro. A parade took place, after which there were speeches at Central Park by prominent Orangemen, including R. H. Holland, Port Hope, Past Grand Master of Eastern Ontario; Rev. Mr. Whitlaw, Grand Chaplain, and several of the local clergy. The procession was the largest ever seen in Peterboro, taking about 40 minutes to pass a fixed point.

MEAT CUTTERS STRIKE.

12,800 Men in Different Departments of Packing Houses Affected.

Kansas City, Mo., July 13.—Eight thousand meat cutters, butchers and others affiliated with the Amalgamated Meat Cutters' and Butchers' Workmen's Union, constituting the entire forces in those departments in the six big packing plants here, struck yesterday in obedience to President Donnelly's order of Monday, calling the men out. All the plants are shut down, and 12,800 men in the various departments are affected, as follows: Armour, 3,500; Swift, 2,800; Cudahy, 2,500; Schwarzschild & Sulzberger, 2,000; Fowler, 1,200; Ruddy Bros., 800.

St. Joseph, Mo., July 13.—More than 5,000 employes of Swift & Co., Nelson, Morris & Co., and the Hammond Packing Company, in South St. Joseph, went out on a strike at noon yesterday, and the plants have closed down. The strikers are orderly.

St. Paul, Minn., July 13.—About 700 employes of Swift & Co., in South St. Paul, went on strike yesterday.

St. Louis, Mo., July 13.—Eighteen hundred butchers and cutters, members of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters' and Butchers' Association, stopped work yesterday.

A CASE FOR DISCIPLINE.

The New York Tribune makes the following very sensible comments upon a recent flag incident which occurred in the state of New York. It is a pity they could not be taken to heart by a certain large and apparently not-decreasing element of the U. S. people:

"If the commander of the United States troops at Fort Totten, Long Island, has not already administered some wholesome discipline to Sergeant Montgomery, Corporal Mosley and the three privates who conceived it to be their patriotic duty to invade private grounds and haul down a British flag on the Fourth of July, he doubtless can be trusted to do so at a suitable time. That they deserve punishment is beyond question. It is a pity that he cannot also discipline the crowd which urged them on to their act of lawlessness.

"Both the soldiers and civilians owe an apology to Mr. Armstrong and also to the community which they have disgraced and made to appear discourteous to strangers and regardless of their rights. Mr. Armstrong, a British subject, had the right to display on his own ground the flag of his country whenever he wished. The taste of displaying it on the Fourth of July may have seemed questionable to some of his neighbors. Perhaps he thought their taste in making the day hideous with bombs and crackers was poor. Whether his taste was good or bad, it was his right to put any flag he wished on his own house. It makes no difference whether the soldiers who pulled down the flag acted boisterously, as charged, or proceeded with all the politeness of Chesterfields. Their mere demand that the flag be taken down was insolence, and after pulling it down from Mr. Armstrong's house was invasion and oppression. This is the kind of military despotism which ought not to be tolerated for one instant. When soldiers think it their privilege to invade a gentleman's domicile and instruct him how he shall celebrate a holiday it is time for a little primary instruction in the nature of American institutions which we may be sure the authorities of the United States army will be glad to give.

"And what shall be said of the citizens who at this day of international peace and good will undertake to mob a foreign resident for being loyal to his own flag? Shall we attribute their conduct to a narrow minded and mistaken patriotism or to plain rowdyism? Perhaps to a little of both. At any rate the sentiment manifested was not creditable to the community. There is no call for citizens to fight over the War of the Revolution with individual Britons whom they may happen to meet, or to play the part of the rowdy who wants to "lick" everybody who does not drink what he drinks and subscribe to all his doctrines, theological and political. Americans owe it to themselves to behave better on their national festival."

TIMELY TOPICS.

The Council, we think, should strain a point to try and build the granolithic walk around the opera house this summer. Situated as it is almost in the centre of the city, the walk is a necessity, leaving aside the fact that the opera house, during a considerable portion of the year, is patronized by large numbers of our leading citizens.

People will notice with pleasure that the building of granolithic crossings is still to go on. That is surely a matter for congratulation. The decision to build cement crossings was one of the wisest ever made by the Council, and it is a pity that the practise was not introduced years ago.

• • •

The footbridge, it seems, is not to be rebuilt till next winter, and, as it is affirmed that the cost then will be about $400 less than it would be at present, there seems to be no reason for grumbling. Temporary repairs will be made, and, as people who should know say the bridge, though wobbly, is quite safe, there appears to be no cause for alarm. One thing is sure, however: A bright lookout should be kept for those hair-brained young "bounders" who rock the bridge for amusement, and, if caught at it, they should be introduced to Magistrate Flint without delay.

• • •

Some thoughtless people, who think not of the consequences, talk of Canada making her own treaties with foreign nations. Suppose Canada secured that power, would she expect England to enforce them. Here is an example of what might happen. It is well put by the Ottawa Citizen: "The owner of a Nova Scotia vessel has got a check for $5,000 through the British Foreign Office as damages from Venezuela for the detention of the vessel in the Orinoco river during the trouble there in 1902. It is very handy to have the British nation to look after Canadian interests abroad. If Canada had made her own treaties and had essayed to collect $5,000 from the tinpot republic on its own hook it would have been told to come and get some more damage." It sounds well to prate about making treaties. The enforcing of them is another thing.

There is no truth in the report that some of the local Orangemen were swimming around Picton with life preservers on yesterday.

• • •

Lovers of music will be glad to hear that the Sons of England Fife and Drum Band is to shortly take up active practise.

• • •

The Hamilton Times man kicks about street cars disturbing people in church. He must be a light sleeper.

• • •

If the oldest inhabitant has a minute or two to spare, will he kindly tell us if he remembers ever seeing a lustier crop of weeds than that which adorns this city at present. They proudly stick up, alongside some walks, fully four feet in the air.

• • •

The Topics man was pleased this morning, in conversation with a leading school teacher, to learn that the results of the recent promotion examinations, published in these columns yesterday, were more than ordinarily gratifying to all concerned. Out of a total of 547 who wrote for promotion, only 21 failed. The examinations this year were no easier than usual, but the results were far ahead of the average year. The gentleman with whom we spoke had no doubt that a great deal of the credit for this fine showing was due to parents of many of the children, who took a live interest in the school work of their offspring, and thus helped them along.

• • •

Judging by the way the Grit press gushes about him, the Liberals, if they lose the game at the next election, won't go down through poor Fielding.

• • •

The Jap victories are getting monotonous, but this is a case when hardly anybody shouts for variety.

• • •

Lady Marjorie Gordon, daughter of the Earl of Aberdeen, a certain "foreigner" once well known in Canada, was married in London yesterday to a gentleman named Sinclair. Judging by the name, the groom was probably a "foreigner," too, though in his portrait he doesn't wear a Tam o' Shanter.

• • •

Scientists now say that band music tends to baldness, while piano music makes the hair grow. Don't believe it. Some piano players we have met make the average man feel like tearing his hair out by the roots.

• • •

As regards the new drill shed, it is still a case of "nothing doing." If the Council had delayed half so long in furnishing the site, everybody would have been jumping on the poor Aldermen. They put the tax rate up nearly a tenth of a mill, in order to buy the Hospital lot, which was, of course, perfectly justifiable, and now somebody else is drawing interest on that money, while the Government marks time and our soldier boys, apparently, will be grandfathers before the new edifice is completed. Oh! that awful Grit Government! How they do love this good old Conservative city!

• • •

This is the season for fishy stories. That's why a Shanghai correspondent sends that one about the Japs losing 28,000 men at Port Arthur.

• • •

The more the members of the Laurier Government talk, the plainer they make it that they are not Imperialists, and would openly shout for independence if they dared. The terms of the new Militia Bill proves that.

• • •

The Hon. Sydney Fisher must be proud of the officers he caused to be appointed to the Scottish Light Dragoons, one of them in place of Dr. Pickell, who was objected to because he was a Conservative. A despatch from Ottawa says that one of Fisher's appointees turned up at camp with his spurs on upside down, two swords on, one on each side, and, to crown it all, a beautiful black eye! The other Fisher appointee had not been long in camp when he was fined $20 for a civil offence.

• • •

The fellow with the two swords must have been reading of old times in Japan, where the warriors of the "Samurai," on account of their bravery, were allowed to wear two swords. As to the black eye the Fisher candidate sported, that was, perhaps, appropriate, for it typified the black eye Dundonald gave the Minister of Agriculture when he exposed the latter's petty interference with the Militia.

• • •

A Montreal lawyer, plaintiff in a breach of promise suit, wants pay for the time he lost in courting. Strange! Most men look on work of that kind as a labor of love.

• • •

Sir Frederick Borden cheerfully proposes to make "His Majesty the King" responsible for all injuries sustained on duly authorized rifle ranges, but otherwise "His Majesty" receives scant consideration in the Militia Bill before the House. In nearly every instance authority is vested in the "Governor-in-Council."

• • •

Manitoba needs rain, and Ontario Orangemen would, yesterday, have cheerfully spared her a lot that fell in this province.

• • •

You should have seen Ald. Panter crossing the river on the logs today. Oh! no. He didn't do it because he was afraid of the footbridge.

• • •

THE MAN ON THE NEXT BLOCK THINKS

That the scarcity of weddings this year must have cut down the parsons' revenues considerably.

That it is a pity there are not enough Wednesday half-holidays to allow each Sunday School to have one to itself.

That camping out, lately, must have been rather a moist undertaking.

That, unless the Gas people get a quicker move on, some of their would-be customers will die of old age before they get fuel gas.

That it must be good to be an Alderman and get two months' holidays.

That the Sons of Scotland should surely invite Lord Dundonald here.

That it is a pity the city cannot keep on building granolithic sidewalks till the old mantraps are all done away with.

That, judging by the amount of real estate which has changed hands lately, people must think Belleville is going to brighten up before long.

MOUNTAIN RANGES.

When White Gives Way to Green They Are on the Decline.

There is something almost lifelike in the growth of mountains. They do not attain their maximum stature all at a leap. The first great uplift of the Sierras, Professor Lawson thinks, elevated the range about 2,500 feet. Even that was not done at a bound. It took time while the gigantic pressures were at work. Vast periods also elapsed while the growing mountains swelled upward to their culmination of 14,000 or 15,000 feet. Perhaps they are still growing.

Age has its common marks everywhere. An old man stoops, shrinks in stature and becomes round shouldered; an aged tree sheds its branches, breaks off at the top and finally tumbles into ruin; a time worn mountain loses its aspiring peaks, smooths down its jagged outlines, rounds off its steep slopes, sinking lower and lower under the constant wear of the elements until only a line of green carpeted hills remains to mark the place where tremendous summits rose into the region of perpetual snow and flashed back the sunshine from a crown of glaciers.

It is relatively an easy task to calculate the age of a mountain range which, like the Sierra Nevada range, had a new birth at the beginning of quarternary time, the latest period in the geological history of our planet. It would be far more difficult to offer the measuring tape of the centuries to the great Appalachian range, which lies just behind the Atlantic seaboard. The Appalachians date back to the remote carboniferous age, which ended so long ago that nobody probably would be willing to risk a guess at the number of millions of years which must since have elapsed. The Appalachians may have been magnificent giants in their day, but time has conquered them, as it will also conquer the rugged Sierras, and now their verdured flanks and tops delight the unalarmed eyes of railway tourists winding on swift trains of parlor cars through the rich valleys that have fattened on the substance of the disintegrated peaks.

The glory of a sun is gone when it passes from light to darkness, from solar incandescence to planetary opacity, and likewise the splendor of life for a mountain departs when it sinks from white to green and from the abode of snow to the levels of grass.—Garrett P. Serviss in Success.

LITTLE THOUGHTS.

Time that is lost is never found.

A soft answer may be a hard argument.

Difficulties are meant to rouse, not discourage.

It is more profitable to read one man than ten books.

One always has time enough if one will apply it well.

He who takes good care of the days need give himself no worry over the year.

Character consists in a man steadily pursuing the things of which he feels himself capable.

A fault which humbles a man is of more use to him than a good action which puffs him up with pride.

It is better to right your wrongs while they are young and tender than to nurse them until they are old and tough.

Readjusted.

Europeans who are inclined to deny the South African native a sense of humor should read a story of Veltman, the chief of the Fingoes, which Dr. Perceval Laurence has told in his book, "On Circuit In Kaffirland." On one occasion four advocates, one of whom was Dr. Laurence, were hard up for transportation and were glad to charter one of Veltman's wagons, with a span of six mules, to convey them to the next circuit town. The charge, they were told, would be £4 pounds per mule, which they suggested was a trifle stiff. Veltman took time to consider their representation, but ultimately sent a message that his price would not be £4 per mule, but £4 per advocate!

Keeping Out the Tide.

They were on the way to India, and, as they were crossing the restless bay of Biscay, one innocent young lady, speaking to another, asked, "Why do the stewards come in and open or shut the portholes at odd times during the day and night?"

The second and better informed lady replied, "My dear, they shut or open them when the tide rises or falls."—Sporting Times.

Different Smiles.

"I assure you, my dear," he protested, "that I do not care about the smiles of other women."

"But I do," sobbed the wife, "and that's why I think it hateful of you to make me wear this shabby bonnet."

Clean Streets.

Keep the streets clean. Dirty streets injure the town in the eyes of strangers and also make home folks careless. The city must lead in the matter of cleanliness and beauty if it expects citizens to evince a like spirit.

What Constitutes Corruption.

"Is he corrupt?"

"Oh, no; I wouldn't call him that."

"What do you consider corrupt?"

"Why, a man who sells out to two opposing interests in the same deal, of course. Anybody ought to know that."

A flower plucked in the morning continues fresh twice as long as one plucked later in the day, when the sun is upon it.

GOOD THINGS IN SEASON.

Refreshing Green Vegetables—Bluefish—Strawberries.

Radishes and rhubarb are now in season in many of our gardens; beets and turnip tops, as well as young lettuce, are, or ought to be, available, thus giving us the green vegetables required at this season of the year.

In preparing radishes as a side dish leave on them about an inch of the stems, as this is said to make them more digestible. Heap on a dish and sprinkle with finely chopped ice. When added to a salad they should be thinly sliced, the scarlet edges adding a touch of dainty color to the dish.

Asparagus, as its season is comparatively short, ought to be served at least twice a week, especially as it has a direct and very beneficial effect upon the kidneys. Each stalk should be scraped with a dull knife, an inch of the dry lower end cut off, then tied in small bundles and boiled in salted water—from half to three-quarters of an hour's cooking will be needed. If it is to be served cold as a salad, it is then set aside. As a vegetable it requires a drawn butter sauce made wholly or in part with the pot liquor. It is also best to serve it on slices of toast dipped for an instant in some of the pot liquor before arranging on the platter.

Shad is slowly disappearing from market, and in its place comes bluefish, one of the best salt water varieties for broiling and baking. In broiling this, or any large fish, the split halves are laid in a greased broiler, and the flesh side is given the longer cooking. After the first searing it is raised from the coals, that the flesh may be thoroughly cooked without burning. During the broiling it should be moistened several times with a little melted butter; season with salt, pepper, a little lemon juice and a drop or two of tabasco or worcestershire. For baking, the fish should be stuffed.

STRAWBERRY CROQUETS.

The illustration shows strawberry croquets. Each large berry has been dipped into beaten egg and rolled in fine stale sponge cake crumbs. This dipping and rolling are repeated; then the balls are plunged into smoking hot fat and quickly browned. When laid on a napkin, each croquet is pierced with a tiny ornamental skewer, and the dish is garnished with fresh berries.—Table Talk.

English Cherry Pie.

One cupful of lard and butter mixed, two cupfuls of flour and a teaspoonful of salt. Work the shortening into the flour with a knife, mix with sufficient ice water to hold together, handling as little as possible. Line the sides of a deep earthen baking dish, fill two-thirds full with stoned cherries, add two cupfuls of sugar and place a small cup inverted in the center of the dish. Cover with a thick top crust, no bottom crust being used. Spread over the crust a liberal coating of lard or butter before placing in the oven. When done raise the crust carefully and remove the cup, allowing the contents to flow through the pie. The juice never boils over when confined in this manner, as is too frequently the case with fruit pies.—Exchange.

A Black Silk Hat Bag.

A black silk hat bag is mentioned by a Table Talk correspondent as a great comfort for man or woman, especially in traveling across the continent. The hat slips easily in and out and is perfectly protected from dust when not in use. Materials: One and one-third yards of good quality of black india silk twenty-four inches wide and three yards of black satin ribbon one-half inch wide. Make the bag with a French seam. Make a three inch hem in the top. Stitch two rows half an inch apart above the hem for the black ribbon draw strings.

Rhubarb Jelly.

Rhubarb jelly is delicious and especially appetizing with meats. To make it cut up the stalks without peeling, then steam them until very soft, lay them in a sieve to drain overnight or put in a jelly bag, as preferred. Measure the juice and allow one pound of sugar to every pint of rhubarb juice and let it simmer ten minutes or until it begins to thicken on the edge; then add the sugar and let it simmer till it jellies on the spoon or when dropped on a cool plate. Remove the scum carefully as it forms and turn into glasses to harden.

Spinach In French Style.

The French prepare spinach by a superior method. When the spinach is boiled thoroughly tender and properly salted, of course free from every trace of grit, throw it in the colander and drench with cold water. This gives it a certain firmness and delicacy attained in no other way. It is to be shaken free of water, chopped fine, placed in a hot saucepan and stirred with a tablespoon of butter and two of cream until hot. Then heap in a mound in a dish with poached or boiled eggs on top.

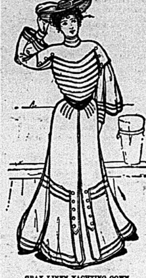
Lemon Shortcake.

Make a rich cake, split and butter it; then take the rind, juice and pulp of three lemons grated, one cup of sugar, one cup of cream, mix thoroughly and spread.

A YACHTING SUIT.

A Smart and Fashionable Costume of Much Utility.

This yachting suit, illustrated by Vogue, will be a very useful one on many other occasions of the summer. It is of gray linen piped with pale green. The skirt has a narrow graduated panel front, with circular sides tucked on hips and in three deep tucks above the graduated circular flounce, which is similarly tucked at the hem. The sides extend to the hem in panel straps trimmed with wheels of pale green linen soutache set on edge.



GRAY LINEN YACHTING GOWN.

Green linen pipes each tuck edge and the panels. The waist is entirely in deep, piped edged tucks below the yoke which extends in squares over the tops of the sleeves, which also have a group of tucks at the hem and a deep tucked cuff on the undersleeve to match the collar. A crush girdle of green leather is worn. A straw bow and gilt buckle trim the gray straw hat.

DRESS COATS.

Their Cheerful Symbolism in the Family—True Value of Etiquette.

How far or how much should we behave at home as we do in company? Must we be just as much dressed and just as agreeable in family life as in society? Must our husbands and sons wear dress coats at dinner? Yes, if that means they should be just as agreeable and polite as if they were with other folk than their own; no, if it means that they have not time between office business and ward politics to conform to the usual etiquette of attire, provided that at least they have time enough to seem glad to be at home again.

Shall women wear evening dress at the family home dinner? That depends on whether such dress means low neck or only something better than the morning working gown. At any rate, they should "change their dress," as the phrase goes. But how can they do it when they have to prepare and dish a dinner? Just here comes in the advantage of training. If cooking schools had done nothing else than to show women how to cook without getting red in the face, how to have everything got ready when men and children were out of the house and then how to dish the dinner and yet not seem tired (even if one is) and how to be pleasant (when one does not feel so) they yet would have largely contributed by their teaching to the pleasures of home life.

Whether one should or should not wear the conventional evening dress in daily life depends on the style and spirit of the home. Its style—that is, its income—often forbids rigorous application of such costume, though its spirit always commands it, for the sense of welcome, leisure and ease conveyed by evening dress can be nourished just as much by a fresh collar or shirt waist as by a dress coat or a low necked gown. The symbolism of the dress coat is the grace before meals, the thankfulness that one has wife, husband, child, friend, somebody, if only oneself, for whom it is worth while to look as charming as one can. The less attractive one is in appearance—for not all are beautiful—the more need is there of the dress coat symbolism.

In many homes where dress coats cannot abound, as well as in those where they do, the family reserves its bits of news, its choicest anecdotes, its conundrums and jokes for the dinner table. Such conversation makes palatable many an ill cooked dish and is economical in the long run, for a merry mind and heart aid digestion. If we can but realize the higher meaning of etiquette we shall look upon the dress coat as merely the temporary outward sign of permanent inward courtesy of thought which in act we would as eagerly extend to our family as to our guests.

Then when we do accept society's conventions of dress we do so without losing the large simplicities of our heart.—Kate Gannett Wells in Boston Cooking School Magazine.

The Attractive Modern Kitchen.

Sightliness is no longer considered an unimportant factor in kitchen furnishings, as the displays at house furnishing stores testify. Everything is made as attractive as use warrants. Cleanliness is more easily obtained in the modern kitchen than in the old time one, because metal, enamel and earthen wares have taken the place so largely of wood and iron. Dark, unsavory corners and nooks are no longer possible in the up to date kitchen.

CASTOFF CLOTHING.

IT PAYS TO SEARCH THE POCKETS AND THE LININGS.

Bills, Coins and Letters Have a Way of Hiding Themselves—Experiences of a Man Who Buys Discarded Garments—Hints to the Careless.

"One can't buy castoff clothing for many years without meeting some queer experiences," remarked an "old clothes man" the other day as he fumbled through the pockets of a suit which he had just purchased for 50 cents. "Of course I don't expect to find anything—nothing except maybe some old letters. But it pays to run through the pockets and feel the lining. If a man who lets his wife sell his castoff clothes only knew what got lost in the lining of his coat sometimes he wouldn't feel so easy about parting with them. A man sticks important letters in his inside coat pocket, and some day when he wants them they are not there. He hunts and fumes around, but the letters don't turn up. Then he thinks they must have been torn up or burned, and he forgets the matter.

"But important letters don't go that way generally. They turn up sometimes to accuse a man. They find their way between the lining of the coat or vest, and we fellows get hold of them. If I wanted to go into the blackmailing business I could make plenty of money. I've found letters and papers in castoff clothing that would make pretty startling reading for some people. Of course when we get the clothes by hunting up the address in the directory we can locate either the writer or the one receiving it.

"I don't think that, as a rule, women sell their husbands' castoff clothing any more without going through all their pockets. Maybe they've got into the habit of searching them so that it becomes a second nature to them. So it is not in the pockets we find things. It's in the lining, where they have found their way gradually.

"You know how easy it is for small coins to work their way through a hole in the lining of a vest and snuggle down in the corner of the cloth. Well, we pick up quite a number of dimes and nickels in this way. Usually a vest is a small silver mine. Probably the wife of a man feels something there and thinks it is only a button or some such thing, or maybe a penny, and she won't bother in trying to fish it out. But pennies don't work down there nearly as readily as the dimes do.

"In the same way a bill will get mixed up in the lining of the inside pocket and finally disappear. The man probably misses a five or ten dollar bill and thinks he must have lost it or spent it foolishly. The matter escapes his mind, the suit is thrown to one side and some day it is sold to the 'old clothes man.' It doesn't escape us. We go through every inch of the lining and examine the corners and inside carefully. The bills we find in the course of a day will often more than pay us for what we have given for all of the clothes.

"Many men are extravagant in getting rid of their castoff clothing. They have so many that they become a nuisance to them. Sell them to the first man who comes along is the easiest way for them to dispose of their useless belongings. If the servants don't take them, we get a fine pick at them. For from 50 cents to a dollar you get a suit that will when brushed, steamed, cleaned and pressed easily bring $3 to $5. The clothes are not worn much, but just soiled and mussed a little. The trousers are stretched a little so they will bag at the knees when used a few days at a time. A man with plenty of money won't stand that. He will order his wife or valet to sell them.

"The greatest amount I ever found in money in one coat was a ten dollar bill, but several times I've found two and five dollar bills and one dollar bills by the score. Once I found a check for $100, but as that was no good to me I returned it to the owner and received a dollar reward for my honesty. The best find, however, was several years ago, when I discovered a bunch of railroad coupons between the lining and inside cloth of one of these fancy vests. I suppose I might have cashed the coupons and received $1,000 for them, but there was some risk to such a proceeding. So I concluded to turn them over to the owner and trust to his generosity. He gave me $100 in bills and commended me for my honesty. He had missed the coupons and had advertised for them. Later I found that he had offered a reward of $300 for their return. You can bet I was mad then that I didn't get more for returning them.

"As for important letters, I might say that they come to us in droves. Generally we read them and chuck them in the fire. It's the best way. If a man has lost a letter which would incriminate him he doesn't like to have it turn up. It will always worry him a little, but he lives in the hope that it is lost for good and gradually forgets it."

DAGUERRE'S PROCESS.

The Way It Was Handled When It Reached This Country.

As soon as Daguerre's process became well enough known in America for practice scientific men and in fact "all sorts and conditions of men" attempted to produce the wonderful pictures. Many homemade and very primitive kinds of apparatus were employed in the experiments, including the cigar box with a spectacle lens. If the operator succeeded in producing an impression that could be seen, it was carried about and shown as a great success.

There were several claimants for making the first portrait by the process. A Mr. Walcott made the claim, and Mr. Joseph Dixon, by letters and other evidence, claimed that the first picture was his, for which it was said Mrs. Dixon sat with powdered face in full sunshine fifteen minutes.

In March, 1840, Messrs. Walcott and Johnson opened a gallery in New York and, announcing their readiness to execute portraits from life, solicited patronage. This was the first daguerreotype gallery in the world. Other places were soon opened. The daguerreotype, although considered desirable as a curiosity, was not popular on account of the length of time required for a sitting, which varied according to the time of day and the strength of the light. It was seldom attempted on a cloudy day. The sitter must have full command of his expression and remain perfectly still from one to three minutes to be successful in getting a likeness distinct enough to be recognized.

The dagerreotype was made on a pure metallic silver surface. After being perfectly cleaned and made sensitive with a rouge buff it was coated in a darkened room with the vapor of iodine, then placed in the camera and exposed before the sitter through the lens. It was still kept from the light and placed over the fumes of hot mercury, where the image developed.—Abraham Bogardus in Century.

SENTENCE SERMONS.

There is no merit in sacrifice devoid of service.

The heart's protest against death is the promise of life.

Your criticism of another is your verdict on yourself.

The great lives have all loved something greater than life.

Sin is always a greater wrong to the sinner than to any other.

Disappointment is not a sufficient reason for discouragement.

Holiness is the reaching after rather than the arriving at perfection.

There is more in being worthy of great place than there is winning it.

The man who is afraid of burning up his wick need not hope to brighten the world.

When a man sets popularity before his eyes he is likely to let principle out of his heart.

Not the Same Man.

A thin, nervous looking man stepped up to the pastor as the latter came down from the pulpit.

"You have had a good deal to say this morning," he observed, "about a feller that killed a man named Abel."

"Certainly," replied the pastor. "'The Sin of Cain' was the subject of my discourse."

"I wish you'd do me the favor next Sunday," said the thin man, in some excitement, "to tell the folks that the man you were talking about this morning ain't no relation to the Kane that keeps a livery stable down by the mill. I don't want none of my friends to think that I had a hand in that killing. That's all. Good day!"

A Fatal Pun.

An old English chronicler, in recording the abdication of King Henry VI. of England in 1461, quaintly says that his reign "had lasted upward of thirty-eight years without his having once intermeddled with public affairs."

The same writer aptly illustrates the shakiness of Edward IV.'s title on his succession to King Henry's throne by a story of a London grocer who lived at the Sign of the Crown and, "having jocosely remarked that his son was heir to the crown," was promptly beheaded for the atrocious pun.

Too Precocious.

The Maiden Governess—What year is it called when February has twenty-nine days? Little Elsie—Leap year. The Maiden Governess—Correct. And how often does leap year come? (No answer.) Why, Elsie, I'm surprised at your not knowing that. Little Elsie—Oh, I haven't reached the age where I keep track of leap years!

Just Worrying.

"You appear ill at ease," said the young lady. "Are you ill?"

"No," answered the young man, "but you know how sensitive and nervous I am, and I'm in agony for fear that your little brother here will repeat some of the remarks you've made about me."

Pretty Close to It.

"Now, that phrase," said the teacher, "is an idiom. Does any little boy know what an idiom is?"

"Yes'm," piped little Tommy Skrapps. "That's what pa is when ma don't want him to have his own way and he does."

Exasperating Experiences.

"Two things make my wife awful mad."

"What are they?"

"To get ready for company that doesn't come and to have company come when she isn't ready."—Indianapolis Journal.

DANGERS OF THE DEEP

By RUTH EDWARDS

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

When Morris heard that the freedom of camp life was to be disturbed by the advent of girls, unlike the right good captain of the Pinafore, he was guilty of a "big, big D."

Holbrook and Seaton looked sheepish. They and Morris were a trio of Yale seniors who had slipped away from New Haven in the interlude between the closing of exams and commencement for one last jollification at Seaton's summer home on the sound before they went their several ways. To him and Holbrook the plan had seemed rather a nice one.

"Oh, come, Bill," said Holbrook. "They're awfully jolly girls. It won't be so bad."

"Oh, of course not," returned Morris scornfully. "I know how it will be. We'll have to wear collars and shave and do the 'sassiety' act. They'll think it's too cold to go in swimming, and they won't know how anyway, and they'll expect to be taught. They'll insist upon going sailing, and they'll scratch all the paint off the deck with their high heeled shoes, and they'll scream and get seasick if it's rough. And the chaperon will corner me and bore me stiff asking me about my studies and whether I'm any relation to somebody or other of the same name who graduated in '67. No, thank you! None of it in mine."

"Well, you needn't see them unless you want," remarked Seaton soothingly. "They'll be up at the big house, and they won't bother you down here at the lodge. You may as well be decent about it. They're only going to stay two or three days anyway."

"Humph! Well, if they butt in like this they'll have to take me as I am. S'pose you fellows will dress up in glad rags. I'm going fishing."

Accordingly when Holbrook and Seaton, shaven and shorn, in immaculate negligee shirts, collars and white ducks, came down to the pier to help the girls and their youthful chaperon ashore Billy was discovered in a ragged flannel shirt, open at the throat, a pair of old golf trousers, rubber boots and a three days' growth of beard, engrossed in manipulating a long fish pole off the neighboring rocks. Holbrook and Seaton marched off up to the house, carrying dress suit cases, and Morris saw them no more that night.

"DO YOU REALLY WANT ME?" SHE CRIED.

He cooked his solitary supper, smoked his solitary pipe and turned in early. With a feeling of righteousness, he woke at 6 in the sweet, cool June morning and, getting into his bathing suit, proceeded down to the dock for his morning plunge. Holbrook and Seaton were still sleeping the sleep of the just and the midnight rollicker.

The tide was high, the air filled with the sweetness of honeysuckle and musical with the call of birds. A girl in a red bathing suit stood at the end of the dock in the early sunlight.

Morris was in time to see her throw her bare arms above her head, spring lightly upward and descend in a straight limbed dive into the rippling water.

"Great Scott!" he remarked to himself. "That was a corking dive all right."

He waited until she appeared on the surface, swimming on her side, and then, with a run and a leap, was after her. She glanced back as she heard his splash and smiled as he same up blinking. "Good morning," she called.

"Better not go too far to the east," he called back. "The tide's running pretty swift."

"Thanks," she answered and swept away with long, even strokes in the opposite direction.

Morris caught up with her. "Water's pretty cold this morning," he remarked affably.

"Cold as your welcome yesterday," she answered, showing her white teeth. "But I like it. It's exhilarating."

She turned over on her back and floated contentedly. Morris was somewhat abashed at the slight ambiguity of her remarks.

Presently she swam toward the dock, and Morris saw her climb the slippery stairs and run lightly up to the bath house.

Twenty minutes later he found his companion of the waves sitting on the dock with her hair down, drying it in the sun.

Morris still wore the disreputable trousers, but his white sweater was passably clean, and he wore golf stockings and yachting shoes. It was noticeable that he had just had a remarkably clean shave. He was meaning to take a little sail before breakfast.

He jumped down into the trim little sloop and began to take the covers off the sails. He whistled softly to himself, and the girl on the dock watched him, her blue eyes shining through her long wet locks. With a cheerful hum and clatter of rigging the white sail ran up the mast and swung to and fro on the wooden boom.

"Want to come?" said Morris suddenly to the girl on the dock.

"Oh, may I? Do you really want me?" she cried.

"Sure!" said the laconic Morris.

The girl did not wait for his assistance. She jumped lightly into the boat, her hair flying around her. She wore a short rough cloth skirt and rubber soled shoes. A sailor waist, low at the neck, showed her strong throat. Her sleeves, rolled up to the elbow, showed well developed arms.

"Oh, isn't she a beauty?" she cried as they got under way, passing her hand caressingly along the side of the boat.

"You bet she is!" said Morris, looking into her azure eyes. This time it was his ambiguity that abashed her.

Out they danced into the sparkle of bright waves. The wind swept the girl's hair from her face in a long shining banner. She sang to herself, too happy to talk. Occasionally her eyes met Billy's as he sat contentedly at the helm and were met by an answering smile. He liked her silent good fellowship. She didn't talk you to death the way most girls did. He whistled an accompaniment to her gay song.

"It is awfully good of you to take me along like this," she said at last, "especially when I know your opinion of girls as a race. The boys told us what you said when they broke the news of our arrival to you."

"Oh—oh—did they? I beg your pardon," stammered Morris.

"Oh, don't apologize. I understand how you felt," said his companion, laughing. "We are in the way, I know."

"If girls were all like you I wouldn't care how often I found them in my way," remarked Morris boldly.

"Was the fishing good yesterday?" she inquired wickedly. "You seemed so interested in it."

Morris blushed. "Oh, come, now, don't rub it in. I see what I missed, all right."

"We were dreadfully hurt," she went on in mock sadness. "We tried to think it was unintentional, but the boys speedily put our minds at rest on that score."

"You must have thought me a regular boor. What can I do to prove to you that I'm sorry?" Morris asked, waxing tender in the sunlight of her mischievous smile.

His companion was evidently practical. "I know. Let me steer for awhile," she said eagerly.

"Why, sure!" he answered and gave his place at the helm—he, the self elected skipper, never known before to relinquish the tiller to any human being. He showed her how to steady the course over the sunny sound. She was an apt pupil and laughed gleefully as they met the waves. Morris, watching her, resolved that he would breakfast at the big house if sufficiently urged.

When Seaton and Holbrook came down to the dock some time later for their dip they held their breath in astonishment at beholding the sloop heeling over to the breeze, a girl at the tiller, while the cynical Billy sat beside her and dried her hair with a Turkish towel.

"Gee whiz!" exclaimed Holbrook. "Will you look at that? If there isn't Billy jollying the chaperon!"

Uncle David's Philosophy.

Yew may patch up a pare of overalls so they will do to go to church in, but a patch on a repetashun may not leve it fit to go to a dog fite. My advice is, don't git yore repetashun in no need of patches, fur a patch on a repetashun is derned hard to keep out of site.

P. S.—This is shore useful, and I 'low is one of the britest things your Unkel David hez ever sed.

Industry and economy may be played tu hard as a sistem. If yew check a hoss' hed up tu tite yew may save sum greene grass and make the hoss some more industrious, but yew won't git so fur in a day.

P. S.—There will be sum munny left to quarl over when yew and me is ded.

A wumman may not be a good bizziness man, but I dun notice she never fergits to name the babby after its ritchest unkel.

P. S.—Your Unkel David may hav a few namesaiks.—Field and Stream.

Stopped Growing.

One day after buying a paper from a very little chap a scientist thought he would test the lad's intelligence by putting a few questions to him. Accordingly he pointed to a pile of paving stones and said:

"How were these stones made, son?"

"They wasn't made; they growed," replied the boy.

"'Growed?' How do you mean 'growed?'" said the man.

"They growed the same as potatoes grow," the boy explained.

The man shook his head. "No, my lad, you are wrong," he said. "Stones can't grow. If you were to come back to these stones five years or ten years or twenty years from now they would still be the same size."

"Of course," said the little newsboy, sneering. "They've been taken out of the ground now and have stopped growin', same as potatoes would."

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

Uncle Terry

....By....

CHARLES CLARK MUNN

Copyright, 1900, by LEE & SHEPARD

"An' right thar," put in Uncle Terry earnestly, "is whar I allus envy the believers, as the widder calls 'em, fer they are satisfied what is beyond an' have it all pict'rd out in thar minds, even to what the streets are paved with an' the kind o' music they're goin' ter have. It's all guesswork, in my way o' thinkin', but they are sure on't, an' that feelin' is lots o' comfort to 'em when they are drawin' near the end. I've been a sort er scoffer all my life an' can't help bein' a doubter, but there are times when I envy the Widder Leach an' the rest on 'em the delusion I b'lieve they're laborin' under."

"But do you believe death ends all consciousness?" asked Albert seriously. "Have you no hope, ever, of a life beyond this blank wall?"

"Sartin I have hopes, same as all on us has, but I wish I was more sure my hopes was goin' ter be realized. Once in awhile I git the feelin' thar ain't no use in hopin', an' then a little suthin keeps sayin' 'Mebbe—mebbe—mebbe'—an' I feel more cheerful again."

Albert looked at the roughly clad and withered old man who sat near, and in whose words lurked an undertone of sadness mingled with a faint hope, and in an instant back came a certain evening months before when the Widow Leach had uttered a prayer that had stirred his feelings as no such utterance ever had before. All the pathos of that simple petition, all its abiding faith in God's goodness and wisdom, all its utter self abnegation and absolute confidence in a life beyond the grave, came back, and all the consolation that feeling surely held for the old and poverty environed soul who uttered it impressed him in sharp contrast to the doubting "mebbe—mebbe" of Uncle Terry.

As Albert looked out to where the waves were breaking upon a ledge, and back again to this old man sitting with bowed head beside him, a sincere regret that it was not in his power to utter one word that would aid in dispelling the clouds of doubt came to him. "Since I lack in faith myself," he thought, "all I can say will only increase his doubt. I wish I had as much faith as the widow, but I have not, and possibly never shall have." For a long time he sat in silence, living over the years during which skepticism had been slowly but surely growing upon him, and then Uncle Terry suddenly looked up at him. It is likely the old man's keen eyes read at a glance what was in Albert's mind, for he said: "It don't do no good ter brood over this matter o' believin', Mr. Page; I've wished I thought different many a time, an' more so now I'm gittin' near the end o' life, but I can't, an' so thar's no use in worryin'. Our 'pinions 'bout these matters are a good deal due to our bringin' up an' the experiences we've met with. Mine, connected with those as has perfessed religion, has, to say the least, been unfortnit, but, as I said afore, I wish I believed different."

He paused a few moments and then added sadly, "This hopin' ain't allus best fer some on us either, fer it's hopin' fer some one to cum year after year that's made Telly what she is an' grieved Lissy an' me more'n she ever knew."

"Lissy an' me sorter 'specled that Telly was the magnet."

Albert looked curiously at the old man beside him, and a new feeling of trust and affection came to him. In some ways Uncle Terry seemed like his own father. Then, following that, came a sudden impulse to be frank with him.

"Uncle Terry," he said, "I have a little story to tell you, and, as it comes close to you, I believe it's right that you should know it. The first time I saw Telly I said to myself, 'That girl is a prize any man may feel proud to win.' I asked her if I might write to her, and what with her few letters and the little I have seen of her I feel that she is the one I want for a wife. I have not even hinted it to her yet, and before I do I would like to feel that you are satisfied with me. May I have your consent to win her if I can?"

Uncle Terry reached out and grasped Albert's hand and, shaking it cordially, answered, "Ye hev my best wishes in the matter, an' I wouldn't say that if I didn't think ye worthy o' her." Then he added with a droll smile, "Lissy an' me sorter 'spected that Telly was the magnet that drew ye down here!"

"I thank you for your confidence and consent," replied Albert gratefully. "I am earning an income that is more than sufficient for two, and if Telly will say 'yes' I shall be the happiest man on earth. And now," he added, let's go fishing, Uncle Terry."

"I guess it's 'bout time," was the answer, "fer thar's two schools workin' into the cove, an' we'll have some fun."

Three hours after, when they landed at the cove fairly sated with pulling in the gamy little mackerel and happy as two boys, Telly met them with a smile and the news that dinner was ready.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"WE will go in my boat," said Telly the next afternoon when she and Albert were ready to start on their trip to the cove, and, unlocking a small annex to Uncle Terry's boathouse, she showed him a dainty cedar craft, cushioned and carpeted. "You may help me launch the Sea Shell," she added smiling, "and then you may steer."

"No, that is the lady's privilege in all voyages," he answered, "and we must begin this one right."

It was a good four mile pull to the mouth of the inlet, and when he helped his fair passenger out he said: "Do you mean to say you rowed up here alone every day to work on that picture, Telly? You will let me call you Telly now, won't you?"

"Why not? All my friends do, and I feel you are my friend." Then she added: "Now I am going to have my revenge and make you pose while I sketch this time. It was the other way before."

"I am glad it is," he said, "for my arms are too tired to use for an hour. How do you want me, flat on the rock fast asleep, the way I was when my boat drifted away?"

"Oh, no, that would look as if you were dead, and as this is to be my reminder of you I want you very much alive." As for the pose she wanted Albert to assume, she could not determine which she liked the best.

"I want to sketch you in the position most natural to you here," she said finally, "and must ask you to choose that yourself."

"Let us trim the boat the way mine was that day, and I will sit beside it and smoke while you work."

The idea was adopted, and while Telly sketched he smoked, contented to watch the winsome face, so oblivious to his admiring glances.

"There," she observed, after a half hour of active penciling, "please lay your cigar aside and look pleasant. I want to catch the expression of your face."

When the sketch was completed she asked if he had any suggestions to make.

"Only one. I would like you in the picture and sitting beside me."

"I would rather not be in it," she replied soberly. "I only want to see you as you are here today. It may be a long time before you come to the Cape again."

"Would you like me to come often?"

"Of course," she answered, turning away her face. "It is so lonesome here, and there is no one I care to talk with except father and mother and Aunt Leach and Mandy Oaks."

Albert's heart began to beat with unusual speed. Never in his life before had he felt the impulse to utter words of love to any woman. "Telly," he said, "I promised to tell you a little story here today, but it's all said in a few words. I love you, and I want you to share my life and all that I can do to make you happy." A trifle incoherent, but expressive.

For a moment, while the tide of feeling surged through that queen's heart and into her cheeks, even to the tips of her ears, she was silent, and then, as both her hands went to her face, she almost whispered: "Oh, no, no; I cannot! I can never leave father and mother alone here! It would break my heart!"

"But you do care a little for me, don't you, Telly?" he begged, trying to draw her hands away from her blushing face. "Just a little, Telly; only say a little, to give me hope."

And then, as one of the hands he was trying to gain was yielded and as he softly stroked and then raised it to his lips, she turned her pleading eyes to him and said: "You won't be angry, will you? And you will come and see me once in awhile, won't you? And let me paint a picture to give you when you come?"

It may have been the pain in his face, added to her own desolation, that overcame all else, for now she bowed her head, and the tears came.

"I thank you for so much, Telly," he answered tenderly, "and God bless you for it. I do not give you up and shall not if I have to wait all my life for you. I can be patient if I only have hope." He brushed his face with one hand and, still holding hers, arose and drew her up. Then Albert slyly put his arm around her waist, and as he drew her to him he whispered, "Just one, Telly, my sweetheart, to make this spot seem more sacred."

It was not refused.

"Come out on the point, dear," he said as she tried to draw herself away, "so we can see the ocean better. I will tell you the story I promised last evening." He still held her a half prisoner, and when they were seated where the waves were beating almost at their feet he began his recital. When he came to that portion in which Frye played a part, and ending in such a ghastly denouement, she shuddered.

"That is the one horrible part of taking your own life," she said, "to think how you will look and what those who find you will say. If I were to do such a thing I should first make sure no one would ever find me."

The remark startled him. "Telly," he said soberly, "do not ever think of such a thing. Would you, whose heart is so loving and tender, burden all those who know you with a lifelong sorrow?"

"No, no, not that way. Only if those who love me were taken I should want to follow them. That is all. Please forget I said it." Then she told him her own brief history, and at last, after much coaxing, a little of the one sorrow of her life.

"Now I know," he said, "why you avoided speaking about the picture of the wreck the first time I came here." Then in a moment he added: "Telly, I want you to give it to me and let me take it away. I want it for two reasons. One is, it gave me the first hint of your life's history. And then I do not want you to look at it any more."

"You may have it," she answered, smiling sadly. "It was foolish of me to paint it."

When the sun was low and they were ready to return he said, "Promise me, sweetheart, that you will try to forget all of your past that is sad and think only of us who love you and to whom your life is a blessing."

That evening he noticed Uncle Terry occasionally watched her with wistful eyes, and, as on the evening before, both he and Aunt Lissy retired early.

"Oh, no, no; I cannot!"

"They wish me well," Albert thought.

The next day Uncle Terry proposed that Telly should drive to the head of the island in his place.

"I'm sorry ye must leave us, Mr. Page," he said when Albert was ready to bid the old folks goodby. "I wish ye could stay longer, but cum ag'in soon, an' remember our latchstring's allus out fer ye."

When the old carryall had made half its daily journey Albert pointed to a low rock and said, "There is a spot I shall always be glad to see, for it was there Uncle Terry first found me."

Telly made no answer. In fact, she had said but little since they started. When they reached the little landing no one else was there. No house was in sight of it, and the solitude was broken only by the tide that softly caressed the barnacled piles of the wharf and the weed covered rocks on either side. No boat was visible adown the wide reach that separates Southport island from the mainland, and up it came a light sea breeze that barely rippled the flowing tide and whispered through the brown and scarlet leaved thicket back of them. Over all shone the hazy sunlight of October. Telly stood listening and hoping that the boat would be late. A look of sadness came over her face and a more than usually plaintive appeal in her expressive eyes. "I am sorry you are going," she said. "It is so lonesome here, and it will seem more so now." Then, as if that was a confession he might think unmaidenly, she added, "I dread to have the summer end, for when winter comes the rocks all around seem like so many tombstones."

Albert put out his hand as if that would aid his appeal, and as his fingers closed over hers he said: "I am going away with a heavy heart, Telly, and when I can come back is hard to say. Will you not promise me that some time, no matter when, you will be my own good and true wife? Let me go away with that hope to comfort

CHARACTER MAKING.

The Home the Genuine Life School of Moral Training.

Character is catching—provided one who has it to give can get close enough to the one who is to take it. The reason the school cannot do the whole or the chief part of moral training is that even in the best schools and with the best teachers the children have to be handled so largely in masses and at arm's length. In the home the parent lives close to the individual child all the time, and whatever the parent has in the way of character to give the child is pretty sure to take without knowing when or how or even being aware of what is going on, until days, weeks, months, perhaps years after, he breaks out with just such feelings, tones, tempers, looks, words and deeds as he had been catching all the while.

The child learns his moral principles by induction from concrete cases in his own experience and observation. A principle that does not rest on some such case makes about as much impression on a child as a drop of water on a duck's back. The example of the parent is the most potent moral influence over the character and conduct of the child. The kindness, the justice, the temperance, the purity, the charity, the patience, the courage, the foresight, the wisdom, that the child sees exemplified in the life of the father and mother he will tend to incorporate into his own life.

Of course the opposite qualities are equally contagious — unkindness, uncharitableness, impatience, foolishness and the like. What shall the parent do who not infrequently is guilty of these odious things and gets detected in them by the child's discerning eyes? There is only one thing to do.

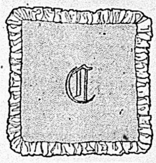
A great many people confess their sins in a lump to God on Sunday who cannot bring themselves to frankly acknowledge a fault to their own children as soon as they recognize it has been committed. The most sympathetic influence over a child can be gained on no less searching terms.

An obvious corollary from all this is the fearful blunder which busy and preoccupied parents make who turn their children over to governesses and servants at the most impressionable period of their lives and never get near enough to the child's life to influence him one way or the other.

The wonder is that children brought up in that way do not turn out bad more often than they do. Their salvation is due to the fact that the governess and servants are often in all moral essentials much the superior of the parents who are capable of turning their children's training over to anybody but themselves.—Dr. William De Witt Hyde in Good Housekeeping.

Useful Sachets.

Scented pads of all sizes may be made to slip between articles in bureau drawers and trunks. The illustration, from the Delineator, shows a pad made of pale pink silk covered with sheer white organdie. A tiny ruffle of the material edged with baby ribbon is let into the edges. The top may be decorated in any desired manner with marking letters or small embroidered flowers. Figured organdie or dimity may be used to fashion the sachet if preferred, and narrow lace may be put on the edge.



A PAD TO SLIP BETWEEN CLOTHING.

The Picturesque Style.

The woman who affects the picturesque style nowadays has a large range of choice. The mode of hairdressing renders the large hat a most suitable adjunct to the gown made after those worn in the time of Louis XIV. The scarf is one of those little additions to dress which a woman can don with great significance, giving an added grace to her movements and to her toilet. Some very pretty ones are being made of tulle bordered with a ruche, in which nestle small artificial flowers, such as lilies or minute roses.

Strawberry Cups.

Scald a pint of milk and while hot stir in two tablespoonfuls of arrowroot dissolved in a little cold milk; add a quarter of a cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt, half a teaspoonful of strawberry extract; cook until creamy, then beat in one yolk and the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs; butter small cups and dust thickly with stale macaroons crushed very fine; fill with the arrowroot mixture and set on ice to become chilled; unmold and garnish with strawberries; serve a boiled custard sauce with these.

Household Brevities.

When boiling a fowl do not add salt till the last hour of cooking.

When crackers are used in stuffing a fowl, use less dressing than if breadcrumbs were the base of the forcemeat. Crackers swell more than crumbs.

Do not lay a carpet without a lining under it, even if it is nothing but a newspaper.

Break lettuce leaves apart. Do not cut them.

Never add flavoring extracts to a dish till it is cold. If put in while hot, much of the flavor passes off in the steam.

FOR STREET WEAR.

Fashions In Motor Coats—Shirt Waist Suits as Popular as Ever.

For automobile and outing wear coats of mohair and shantung are the favorite materials. They are admirably suited for shedding dust. The mohairs have never before been manufactured in such silky materials as this year. The shantungs are heavier than last, and the favorite shades are ash gray, damson blue and willow green. The coat of natural colored silk, however, trimmed with black gold and cream braid, has a very smart appearance.

A CARRIAGE HAT.

Both black and brown taffeta coats are also being turned out for the same purpose.

The latest development of the sleeve frill is the employment of fine lace frills dyed to the exact shade of the gown. Chiffon is also largely used for sleeve frills.

Shirt waist suits will be more popular than ever, and these little one color costumes are infinitely more becoming than the light waist and dark skirt to the woman who is at all inclined to stoutness.

The boat shape turban is again with us and is sure to have many admirers, as it lends itself so admirably to the shaded petal trimming. Rose petals of silk or velvet are particularly effective.

In the picture we have a dainty hat most suitable for carriage wear. It is of horsehair straw, draped with lace and a bunch of pink roses.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

HINTS ON ECONOMY.

Last Year's Dresses Can Be Renovated—The Season's Tailor Made.

There is quite a pronounced fancy for simple gauze and muslin frocks for evening wear.

Renovations this season are not hard to make. The principal difficulty comes in the skirts, which require more fullness, and often this may be obtained by the addition of a front panel of embroidery, the same material being used to make the sleeves fuller. Sleeves are often plain to the elbow, where they blossom out into many long frills of lace or accordion plaited chiffon. Wide collars of lace and embroidery cover a multitude of sins, not to speak of the ever present fichu. Skirts may be freshened up by the addition of ribbon ruching put on in a conventional design.

CREAM VEILING GOWN.

The tailor made frock is likely to prove the most expensive of the entire wardrobe, for it cannot even be partially made at home. The woman who cannot afford to invest much money in hers had better buy it ready made in some good shop.

It is no wonder the best tailor mades are expensive; they show such perfection of cut and such dainty touches in the way of handmade trimmings.

Lace stoles are mounted on chiffon and taffeta and make dainty neck pieces with which to replace the old fashioned boa. Chiffon, crepe de chine and mousseline are made up in dainty fashion with gauged centers of contrasting material. Ribbon is shirred and combined with chiffon and lace to form chic cape effects.

Pongee this season comes dyed in a variety of shades, including gray, a royal blue and a rich brown. It makes pretty coat and skirt costumes and shirt waist costume dresses, and it wears well.

The picture represents a gown of cream veiling trimmed with flat tucks and circles formed of galloon.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At starting prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

THE MINES OF GOOD OLD NORTH HASTINGS.

WHAT AN AMERICAN EXPERT HAS TO SAY OF THEM.

An American Mining Engineer, writing to The Toronto Globe, has this to say of the mines of North Hastings:

"After extended tours through the mining sections of North Hastings and adjoining countries on three different occasions, I cannot refrain from writing a few lines about what I saw and learned. I first visited that section during 1898, and what I saw then made a favorable impression on me. There was a little prospecting going on at various places in Kaladar, Elzevir, Barrie, Raglan, Radcliffe, Dungannon, Madoc, Marmora and Belmont, which were visited in the order given and the materials found were gold at many places, asbestos, actinolite, lead and silver, corundum, mica, copper, talc, iron and arsenic. In the latter two townships were the only places where mining was conducted as a business, i.e., at Deloro, in Marmora township, and Belmont, in Belmont township.

"My next visit was in 1902, in company with other men interested in mining. We then spent some three weeks visiting various places, investigating prospects, some of which impressed us very favorably. We found gold-bearing arsenical ores in widely scattered places. But arsenic, associated with other metals in any ores, is somewhat of a bugbear to the average miner and metallurgist. We passed these by as not being worth attention, and were, therefore, very much interested in what we saw and learned at Deloro mine. Here we found a well-built and scientifically conducted mining plant, consisting of a twenty-stamp mill, an air compressing power plant and other things in keeping. The mill was crushing about 2,000 tons a month of arsenopyrite, containing gold, and which is as difficult an ore to treat as can be found anywhere. Hence we were much gratified to be shown the inner workings of this plant. We found that about 90 per cent. of the gold value was saved from these ores, an operation we could not have believed possible had we not been shown convincing proofs thereof. This in itself is remarkably good work, but there still was another agreeable surprise awaiting us. We were next shown through the arsenic refinery, where the residue from the mill, consisting of the concentrated arsenopyrite, 'mispickel,' was converted into a most valuable by-product, in that 80 to 90 tons of pure white arsenic was made and shipped monthly, and apparently at very low cost. Seeing this added much value to the arsenical ores we had seen at different places during our six weeks' trip.

"We next visited the Belmont mine, and here, too, we found good work being done, and evidently with a view to further enlargements. Everything had a substantial appearance. This mine has several large ore bodies, and although these veins are in the same formation as the last-named mine, there is no arsenic in the ores. The gold values are here locked up in the iron sulphides and pyrrhotites. The matrix is a dioryte-schist and quartz. A large water-power was under development for furnishing compressed air to all parts of the mine, a distance of about three miles. This will be, as far as the writer is aware, the longest transmission of compressed air known to mining. We concluded, after seeing the work done at these two mines, both owned by strong and conservative English companies, and both under capable managements, that here was a good start made for further developments of the whole section, and the writer decided to come later again to see the results.

"I have no desire either to advertise or speak adversely of North Hastings. I have no personal interest there, other than as a mining engineer visiting the district at intervals on behalf of clients. My sole reason for taking up my pen is a desire to awaken a healthy interest in what I believe to be a very promising mining region if left to those skilled in the art of developing nature's latent resources. As Mr. T. A. Richard, one of our most eminent mining authorities, aptly puts it in an article in the Engineer and Mining Journal of May 5th, "Let the shoe-sticker stick to his last." I would respectfully add to this, the drummer to the sale of his goods, the jeweller to his shop, the minister to saving souls, the mason to his trowel, and the lumberman to his axe, and let that alone which they do not and never will understand. And last, though not least, the proprietor of a local paper should exercise the utmost care in publishing mining news, and should only publish that which he knows to be absolutely true if he desires to serve the best interests of the community in which he lives.

"American capital is ready and willing to assist in developing your mines, but you must do your part."

HIGH LIGHTS OF FASHION.

The New Tailor Made Gown of Paris. Trimmings Galore.

Grays are extremely attractive this year, ranging from "oyster" to iron gray and elephant gray and affording such a variety of shades that among them almost any woman may find one to wear with comfort and satisfaction to herself. While usually associated with the elder folk, some smart gowns for young women adopt this useful hue at present. A taking instance is the gray dress of the cut, which is relieved with rich soft hued oriental embroidery. A circular straw hat of pale chestnut brown, looped up with satin ribbon and rhinestone studs, completes a costume as striking as it is practical.

Biscuit and tan shades are to be smart, but how few complexions are really clear enough for them. A trap for the unwary they prove if there is the least sallow tinge in the skin.

As an item of comfort to those who are not exceedingly slim it should be noted that amid the many fluffy examples of the latest chic there appear certain models of the tailor made order. This type of garment is always becoming to the plump woman and is her exclusive property.

Supple cloth and taffeta radium, a tissue in indescribable shades resembling shot mirror silk, together with infinitesimal checks, compose exquisite toilets.

It is evident that soft tiny checked canvas and silks made with very fully plaited or tucked skirts will be decidedly popular for elaborate toilet, while cloths in light pastel colors and the new delft blue compose many of the smart tailor made costumes which are particularly noticeable for their perfect simplicity. One especially effective was in light gray tiny checked fine cloth made with a short basked single breasted coat having a black leather belt at the waist. A narrow black taffeta collar opened at the neck to display a white guipure chemisette and amber velvet cravat.

The multiplicity of trimmings now necessary if a gown is to be "in it" to the slightest degree it is impossible to describe. Passementerie, braid, fringes, drop ornaments, all are in demand. Buttons and "bobs" play an important part. The latter occur in immense variety—beads, jet, sequins and silk or chenille embroidery. Pearl garnitures are dreams of loveliness whether in the daintiest of passementerie or elaborate pendent ornaments.

SMART PRACTICAL COSTUME IN GRAY.

For the bride's gown this season pearls are the coveted trim ornament. Pearl passementeries for more general use combine pearls, rhinestones and spangles and are things of beauty, but how long they will remain a joy is a dubious question.

Newest in trimmings are the quilled ribbons used as a skirt trimming and complemented with a broad quilled ribbon flounce on the corsage. Silk and velvet striped ribbon is used to form bretelles and revers. An inlet of Scotch plaid taffeta ribbon on waist and skirt forms another unique bit of decoration.

J. VERNON-WALDER.

Fashion's Echoes.

A black hat with a picturesque long ostrich plume in azure blue, hyacinth blue, orchid mauve, salad green or other softly beautiful hue completes the fashionable black taffeta costume in splendid style.

A long, narrow, looped bow of white tulle, spangled with silver and holding two short white ostrich tips, is one of the ornaments used to fasten a bride's veil.

Nun's veiling, albatross and gauze are fabrics other than silk or satin that may be used for a wedding gown.

Checks and stripes in nun's veiling are up to date for the short, summer walking dress.

Silk finished alpaca makes a useful and stylish hard wearing gown.

The charms of silk and linen are combined in linen de soie, a soft, rather coarse material for morning dresses.

Three-quarter length unlined coats of louisine, taffeta or crape in the lightest tints are dressy summer affairs.

Sleeveless taffeta capes and mantles, lace trimmed, are one of the Paris fancies.

White suede gloves ornamented with lace applique were worn by a recent bride.

Champagne colored straw is one of the season's favorites in hats, either dressy or plain.

Ribbon flowers and straw flowers are among the popular millinery trimmings.

Indigestion

isn't always the stomach's fault. Constipation clogs the bowels—lazy liver won't work—kidneys get upset. No wonder food is not digested properly.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO PASS A BY-LAW TO ALTER, WIDEN AND DIVERT VICTORIA AVE. AND PINNACLE ST.

To Whom It May Concern:—

Take notice that the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville intend to pass a by-law for the purpose of altering, widening and diverting the northwest corner of Victoria Ave and Pinnacle St. in the City of Belleville by taking in and including with the said streets at that point a part of the Lot known as the Hotel Lot on Henry Carr's plan of the City of Belleville, composed of 592 square feet more or less, and being described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the west limit of Pinnacle St. northward 40 feet from the intersection of the northern limit of Victoria Ave. with the western limit of Pinnacle St.; thence southwesterly on the outside of an arc of the circle, with a radius of 63 feet, to a point on the northern limit of Victoria Ave., 40 feet westward from above described intersection; thence easterly along the northern limit of Victoria Ave. 40 feet to Pinnacle St.; and thence northerly along the westerly limit of Pinnacle St. 40 feet to the place of beginning.

And take notice further that the said by-law will be read a first time and may be finally passed at a meeting of the said Municipal Council on the 1st day of August, 1904, commencing at 8 o'clock in the evening.

And take further notice that any person whose land may be prejudicially affected by the proposed by-law will upon petition be heard either personally or by counsel or solicitor at such meeting of the Council, or if desired at any previous meeting thereof.

And take further notice that the plan of the proposed street may be seen at the office of the City Clerk in the City Hall in the City of Belleville.

PICTON CELEBRATION WAS A DECIDED FROST.

RAIN SPOILED THE DAY — THE TOWN FULL OF VISITORS.

The steamer Varuna yesterday took about 300 to Picton to attend the Twelfth of July celebration advertised for that town. Picton was full of visitors, and there would undoubtedly have been a splendid celebration only for the weather. It rained there fully as much as here, and the whole thing was spoiled. The Picton lodge marched around a little, accompanied by the band, but there was no attempt at a general procession, and no speeches. However, the local people who went enjoyed themselves, and express no regret at going. The Picton brethren used them royally. The celebration would, only for the weather, have undoubtedly been one of the best ever held in this district.

AT CAMPBELLFORD.

Despite the rain in the morning the demonstration at Campbellford yesterday was a success. After dinner it was fine and the parade consisted of 33 Orange Lodges. Speech-making was held in the park and it was estimated that at least 3,000 persons were in attendance. Addresses were given by a number of prominent members of the Order, including Bro. F. M. Clarke, of this city, Grand Secretary of Ontario East. It was one of the most successful demonstrations ever held in the district.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

Only another week to wait and then what a jolly big bunch of boys from the Y.M.C.A. will start for Camp Quinte. The committee in charge under the direction of Dr. Clarke, are very busy getting things ready. Last year's camp will be surpassed in every way. The fine new lodge is ready. Yesterday the pioneers left on the "Y.M." with the shoot the chutes on board. Ample time is being taken to make all preparations. "George" will join the pioneers during the week. "Harry" has some pleasant surprises for the fellows in the line of sports. Every precaution for the care and comfort of the fellows is being taken by Secretary Wilkie, who will be in charge.

Further particulars, booklets, etc., may be secured from any of the following boys: —; John O'Flynn, Hudson Turner, Roy Moore, Ernest Alford, Stanley Miller or Wallace Robb. Mr. H. O. McGuire, the assistant secretary, at the Association, will be pleased to meet parents and others interested in the camp. The party is limited to 40. Early applications should be made as it looks as if the limit would be exceeded. Applications for camp should be handed in at the Association at once, accompanied by the registration fee, balance of dues payable Monday, July 18th.

Monday, July 18th, at 8 p.m., in the Secretary's room, Dr. Clarke wishes to meet the boys named above to make an award to the winning team for their work.—Com

Employees Entertained.

The employees of the Ritchie Co. were this afternoon entertained by the firm. The party, numbering about 40, were taken by steamer Annie Lake to Massassaga Park, where the afternoon was pleasantly spent. Supper was provided at the hotel for the party.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and when especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

LATEST WAR NEWS

Story of Big Japanese Losses is Also Reported From Tien-Tsin.

Chinese Refugees Say the Great Assault on Port Arthur is On.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

London, July 13.—The Tien-Tsin correspondent of the Evening Star repeats the report that thousands of Japanese have been killed in an unsuccessful attempt to take Port Arthur from the land side.

Chefoo, July 13.—Chinamen who arrived in a junk from off Port Arthur state there is every evidence that the great assault on the fortress was on.

Togo's fleet has been reinforced by the arrival of several large vessels from Sasebo, where they had been refitted and repaired, and the informants opinion is that a tremendous bombardment by sea and land is planned.

Over a hundred heavy siege guns have been landed and placed in position, and these will initiate the attack.

Mukden, July 13.—Advices received here from Port Arthur says that Gen. Fock attacked the Japanese right flank on July 5, and drove the Japanese from their positions. The Russian cavalry advanced as far as Nuh-Ga pass.

The Japanese are landing troops at Siao Ping Tao, about midway between Port Arthur and Port Dalny, on the east coast of the Liao Tung Peninsula.

The utmost confidence is felt at Port Arthur of the ability of the garrison to hold out.

DIED AT GOOD OLD AGE.

A PARALYTIC STROKE WAS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE DEMISE OF THOMAS WALDRON.

Three years ago Mr. Thos Waldron, of Thurlow, had a paralytic stroke from which he never recovered. This morning he passed away at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. John McDonald. Deceased was 90 years of age, having been born at Birmingham, Eng., in the year 1814. For upwards of half a century he had been a resident of Thurlow Township, where he was well and favorably known. Mr. Waldron had been a member of the Methodist Church for many years. The only surviving members of the family are one son, Mr. Jas. Waldron, and one daughter, Mrs. McDonald.

Wages Case.

Henry Kenneston charged Albert Weaver with refusing to pay him $14, alleged due for wages. The complainant was a farm hand and left during the month of June. Judgment reserved. Mr. Carnew appeared for Weaver.

Alleged Insult.

Joseph Bolster was charged with using insulting language towards a Mrs. Badgley. The evidence was of such a contradictory nature that the Magistrate dismissed the case.

Alleged Theft.

The charge against Mrs. A. E. Gerem, of Sidney, of stealing a purse, the property of Mrs. J. H. Ferrell, was again taken up this morning and continued this afternoon. Mr. Gerem is also charged with concealing the theft. Mr. Anderson for Crown and Mr. McMahon for the defendants.

Mrs. Gerem was found guilty, but, owing to the fact that she had a babe in arms, and as she is also in a delicate state of health, no punishment was meted out. She was, however, bound over in the sum of $500 to appear before the Magistrate when called upon for sentence.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

SOMETHING ABOUT A BENEFICENT INSTITUTION

THE HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS AND THE GOOD IT IS ACCOMPLISHING IN THIS CITY.

The ladies of the Women's Christian Association, and more particularly those who have the management of the Home for the Friendless, are deserving of much praise for the improvements which have recently been made to the Home. A representative of The Intelligencer last night visited the Home, which is situated on Moira street, at the juncture of Franck street, and through the courtesy of the Matron, Miss Minnie Connors, was shown through the building. The work of the ladies was visible on every hand. From the woodshed to the remotest room in the building it is scrupulously clean. The floors and woodwork have been cleaned and painted, whilst the walls and ceiling have been papered, making the interior inviting and cheering to the inmates. A considerable portion of the work was done by the ladies themselves, as a labor of love. The Home is now in excellent order and the aged inmates, consisting of four women and a like number of men, appeared to be happy, and why should they not be? for everything possible is done to make them so. The weekly visit of the ladies of the Flower and Fruit Mission, with gifts, is much appreciated. Some other needed improvements to the Home will probably be made in the future, but, as the ladies state, they cannot do all at once. The generosity of the citizens and many outside of the city is very pleasing to the ladies, and is suitably acknowledged.

On Friday evening of this week a garden party will be held at the Home, and the I.O.O.F. band have kindly volunteered their services. This will not only be a pleasure to the inmates, but also, it is hoped, be of pecuniary benefit to the association.

Mr. Bogle Coming Home.

The Whitehorse (Yukon) Star, of June 30, says: "Robert Bogle, a pioneer Dawson business man and for a long time in charge of the Eldorado warehouse, arrived on the White Horse yesterday and left on this morning's train en route to his old home at Belleville, Ontario, where he will visit for several months. Mr. Bogle is interested in the Violet group of quartz claims, distant about 15 miles from Dawson, and on which a company composed of solid business men like himself has already expended a large sum of money in demonstrating the worth of the property. The work done has shown the ledge to be very rich, assays showing as high as $124 to the ton. On this showing the company is selling stock sufficient to purchase a cyanide plant and 100 stamp mill, the outfit costing $40,000, which will be shipped in during the next ten days, erected on the property and in operation before the first of October."

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

REGULARS AT HALIFAX.

Miners Said to Be in Close Sympathy With Strikers.

Halifax, N.S., July 13.—A party of regulars arrived at Sydney yesterday from Quebec to relieve the militia on duty at the steel works, and brought a Maxim gun with them.

Members of the Provincial Workmen's Association assert that the miners are in close sympathy with the strikers.

The Steel Company is preparing to operate two open hearth furnaces and if the Dominion Coal Company supplies the coal the miners may strike.

Lady Gordon Married.

London, July 13.—Lady Marjorie Gordon, the only daughter of the Earl of Aberdeen, formerly Governor-General of Canada, was married in London yesterday afternoon to John Sinclair, member of Parliament for Forfarshire, and a former captain of the Royal Irish Lancers. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Davidson, officiated. The church was filled with distinguished people. Mr. Sinclair has long been connected with Lord Aberdeen. He was the latter's aide-de-camp when the Earl was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in 1880, and was secretary to the Earl in 1893-98, when the latter was Governor-General of Canada.

Kaiser to Visit King.

Berlin, July 13.—It is stated that Emperor William will visit King Edward at the end of October, at which time it is also expected that he will pay a private visit to the Earl of Lonsdale..

Bible Translation.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century the Bible was current in some forty languages—today in some 400. It is necessary to use sixty different sets of types to print in these many tongues, while some fifty languages require to be printed in more characters than one to be legible to all races and creeds in that particular country. Again, to translate the Bible into one foreign tongue is in itself a work of more than a lifetime very often. What must be then the labor required to learn some barbaric tongue which has no writing, no characters or alphabet of its own and to supply all deficiencies before the task of translation can begin? Moreover, the Biblical metaphors and similes have to be altered and made comprehensible to untutored minds. One translator, Henry Nott by name, spent twenty years in Tahiti to learn the language, after which he spent another twenty years in translating the book into the Tahitan tongue.—London Chronicle.

A Singular Coincidence.

One Sunday afternoon in the summer of 1889 Mrs. K., a northern woman, said to her husband: "I don't know why it is, but all the afternoon I have been thinking of our old friend, Emma, in Natchez, Miss. We have not heard from her for several years. I believe that I will write to her." She did so. The letter was mailed that evening. It would reach Natchez on the next Tuesday. On Tuesday morning Mrs. K. received a letter from Emma, dated Sunday afternoon, commencing: "My dear Mrs. K., I don't know why it is, but I have been thinking of you all the afternoon and concluded that I would write to you. It has been several years since I have heard from you." Hence these two ladies, one in the far south, the other in central Illinois, were thinking of each other, writing in almost the same language and evidently at the same moment.

McINTOSH BROS.

CANADA NOT THE EMPIRE

Militia Can't Go Outside to Assist in Latter's Defence.

Change in Militia Act Which Meets With Condemnation From Members of the Commons—If Militia Is Called Out For Active Service, Parliament Must Be Convened in a Fixed Period—Grand Trunk Arbitration.

Ottawa, July 13.—The further the bill to amend the Militia Act is scrutinized, the more evident it becomes that a skillful anti-Imperialist artist had a hand in its preparation. These manifestations of British-hating propensities are for the most part petty. "His Majesty" receives very little mention in the bill before the House. In nearly every instance authority is vested in the "Governor-in-Council."

One point was raised yesterday which is of vital importance as affecting the relations between Britain and Canada. Here is the clause in the bill before the House:

"The Governor-in-Council may place the militia or any part thereof on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency."

And here is the clause in the present Military Act:

"Her Majesty may call out the militia or any part thereof for active service, either within or without Canada, at any time when it appears advisable to do so by reason of war, invasion, or insurrection or danger of them."

Comparison of the Acts.

Comparing the two clauses, it will be found that whereas under the present act, the Canadian militia could be sent outside of Canada for the defence of the Empire it is under the proposed law prohibited from going abroad except for the defence of Canada.

Sir Frederick Borden argued that the substance of the present act was not changed in this respect. This assurance was considerably discounted by his refusal to reject the new clause in favor of the old one.

Several members, among them Seymour Gourley, Dr. Daniel of St. John, W. F. Maclean and Col. Sam Hughes, spoke strongly against withholding the support of the Canadian militia from the defence of the Empire, while Canada relies on British troops for protection in case of trouble.

Calling the Militia Out.

Sir Frederick Borden stated that he had talked the matter over with the Premier, who approved of the insertion of a clause making it obligatory on the Government to convene Parliament within a fixed period, in case the militia is called out for service outside of Canada. On this understanding Mr. Bourassa agreed not to offer an amendment.

Good progress was made on the bill and when the committee rose at 11 o'clock only one clause, that relating to the responsibility of the Government in connection with rifle ranges, remained to be disposed of.

Grand Trunk Arbitration.

Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick introduced a bill respecting an arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. The bill, he explained, was designed to widen the powers of the arbitrators, to give them power to examine witnesses under oath and to order the production of papers in settling the dispute between the company in connection with traffic arrangements over the Intercolonial between Riviere du Loup and Point Levis.

PICTURESQUE CANADA.

One of Mr. Fisher's Officers Appears With Spurs Upside Down, and the Other Is Fined $20.

Ottawa, July 13.—The two officers whom Mr. Fisher was instrumental in having appointed to the Scottish Light Dragoons have turned out anything but creditably to that corps.

One of them turned up at the recent camp with a pair of gaiters on and small box spurs fitted upside down. He also had two swords, one on each side, and to complete his picturesqueness a beautiful black eye. He was sent home.

The other had not been long in camp when he was fined $20 for a civil offence. And it was for these two officers that Mr. Fisher by his meddling got rid of the best commanding officer Canada ever had.

To Settle By Arbitration.

London, July 13.—The Foreign Office announces that an agreement was signed yesterday by Foreign Minister Lansdowne and the German Ambassador providing for the settlement by arbitration of differences which may arise of a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of existing treaties between Germany and Great Britain. The terms of the agreement are identical with those recently concluded with France, Italy and Spain.

Mr. Stratton Appointed.

Toronto, July 13.—A meeting of the Cabinet was held yesterday, all the Ministers except Mr. Ross and Mr. Dryden being present. Only routine business was transacted, with the exception of the appointment of the Hon. J. R. Stratton as a member of the Railway Committee during the prolonged absence of the Minister of Agriculture.

Diaz Still President.

Mexico City, Mex., July 12.—Porfilo Diaz was formally re-elected as President of Mexico yesterday. Ramon Corral was elected Vice-President. Corral's election is taken to mean that he will, in the near future, be the real President, for President Diaz is aging rapidly and is feeling the strain of office.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

Young Farmer Near St. Mary's May Succumb to His Distressing Injuries—Other Accidents Elsewhere.

Stratford, July 13.—One of the worst electrical storms of the season, accompanied by very loud claps of thunder and a heavy downpour of rain, passed over the city and district shortly after four o'clock yesterday morning. Chas. Ellah, a young farmer of Downie, was struck by lightning, with the result that his lower limbs and waist are paralyzed, and have turned black. Dr. Brown of St. Mary's was summoned, and up till 11 a.m. was still working with him. He was unconsious for at least two hours after he was struck. The brick chimney on the roof was cut perpendicularly in two, one half falling to the ground, and the other remaining upright.

Drowned at Edmonton.

Galt, July 13.—In a private letter received by Robert Elliott, Oak street, comes the sad news of the drowning of James Elliott, third son of Thomas Elliott of Edmonton. Mr. Elliott lived in Galt until about 22 years ago, when he moved to the west. The boy, who was 18 years of age, was bathing in the river, and got beyond his depth.

Expected to Die.

Brockville, July 13.—A brakeman named W. E. Cunningham lies in the General Hospital here suffering from serious internal injuries sustained Monday night at Thousand Island Junction while coupling cars on the Grand Trunk Railway. He was caught between the cars and narrowly escaped being cut to pieces. His hip was broken, and the doctors think he will die.

Bad Crossing Accident.

Seaforth, July 13.—While William Wright, a farmer living near here, in Tuckersmith Township, was crossing the Grand Trunk tracks at the Main street crossing with his team yesterday afternoon his wagon was struck by a freight train which was shunting. Mr. Wright was thrown out and seriously hurt. The team and wagon were dragged some distance. One horse had its leg broken and had to be killed. The wagon was completely demolished.

Collier Run Down.

Quebec, July 13.—At an early hour yesterday morning the collier Verax, bound for Sydney, C.B., was run into by the S.S. Athenian of the Donaldson Line off St. Laurent Point, a few miles below Quebec. The Verax was run ashore and is badly damaged. The Athenian proceeded to Montreal. Three of the crew of the Verax are missing.

Mr. J. McIntosh, M.P., Dead.

Ottawa, July 13.—News was received here yesterday of the death of Mr. J. McIntosh, M. P. for Sherbrooke.

John McIntosh represented Compton from 1886 till 1894 in the Quebec Legislature. He was elected in the Conservative interest as member for Sherbrooke to the Commons in 1900, on the death of Hon. W. B. Ives.

Worried He Took His Own Life.

Berlin, July 13.—Michael Jehle, aged 75, committed suicide shortly after 5 p. m. yesterday by slashing himself in the body with a butcher knife at his late residence. He was removed to the Berlin and Waterloo Hospital, where he died at 6 p. m. Deceased recently sold his property and because he could not buy it back he worried until he became so worked up that he took his life.

Mayor Jones Dead.

Toledo, O., July 13.—Mayor Samuel M. Jones died at 5.07 p. m. yesterday.

DID JAPS LOSE 28,000?

Two Reports of Big Losses By the Russian Mines.

Two Armies Facing Each Other on the Heights of the Liank River Ready to Engage in a Death Grapple—The Burning Question Is Who Will Be First to Cross the Dread Valley—Japs Fighting Northward.

London, July 13.—The Morning Post's Shanghai correspondent says that the Japanese casualties by land at Port Arthur Sunday night are reported to have been 28,000, but none of the other special war correspondents mention a disaster at Port Arthur.

St. Petersburg, July 13.—A despatch from a Russian correspondent at Mukden, dated July 12, says: "According to intelligence received here, the Japanese last night attacked positions near Port Arthur and were repulsed with enormous losses, not less than thirty thousand, it is said, being killed and wounded by our mines." ...

Two Armies Facing Each Other.

Headquarters of General Count Keller, Niuthiay, eleven miles west of Liandiansian, July 13.—The opposing armies are grimly facing each other on the heights across the Liank River, ready to engage in a death grapple. The Liank crosses the main Liaoyang-Fengwangcheng road, twenty-eight miles east of Liaoyang, flows north into the Taitse River, which passes through Liaoyang and empties into the Liao River.

The correspondent of the Associated Press, who arrived here after a thirty-five mile ride from Siaolindui, saw long lines of infantry and transport trains winding through the mountain. At Liandiansian, a lookout stationed in a treetop pointed the way to Gen. Keller's headquarters, near Niutkiay. There the Russian eastern army was found, hidden in the hills.

The whole army is anxious to fight Gen. Kuroki, whose headquarters are at Vandiapuze, and whose men are entrenched on the other side of the river. The burning question is who will be the first to cross the dread valley of the Liank River.

Fighting Its Way Northward.

Tokio, July 13.—The Japanese Takushan army is northwards from Siyen. It fought a series of small battles with the Russians on July 9 and 10. The army is divided into two columns, which advanced against the Russians.

Shrouded in Mystery.

St. Petersburg, July 13.—The Japanese advance to Tatchekio is shrouded in mystery.

Kuropatkin in Bad Way.

St. Petersburg, July 13.—Colonel Notvitsky of the general staff, in an interview yesterday, said: "The result of the loss of Kaichou will probably be the evacuation of Newchwang. General Kuropatkin's position is more difficult than that which confronted Lord Roberts in South Africa. It is as if Lord Roberts received his supplies by rail via Constantinople, Cairo and Central Africa. It will be a long time before General Kuropatkin will have enough supplies and men to assume the offensive. In the meanwhile he will have to fight rear-guard actions, perhaps giving up important positions like Newchwang, which are of vastly more consequence than Kaichou."

British Steamer Stopped.

Perim, Straits of Babelmandeb, July 13.—The British steamer Menelaus, from the Clyde for Shanghai, which arrived here last night, reports that she and the British steamer Crewe Hall, from the Clyde for Kurrachee, were stopped on June 11 in the Red Sea, south of Jedda, by the Russian volunteer fleet steamer St. Petersburg, which carried eight guns and a large crew.

THE BISLEY SHOOTING.

In Spite of Adverse Winds Canadians Made Some Good Scores.

Bisley Camp, July 13.—(C. A. P.)—Strong winds yesterday adversely affected scoring but notwithstanding some good cards were returned by Canadians.

Firing for the Alexander Martin match rifle yesterday, Sergt. G. Mortimer of the 10th Royal Grenadiers scored 47 out of a possible 50 at 900 yards.

In the Armourers Company competition, ten shots at 900 yards, Major W. F. Moore of the 20th Regiment, Georgetown, made 47 and Pte. Neil Smith of the 21st Regiment 46 out of a possible 50.

Pte. Neil Smith also shot in the "Skilled Shots" competition, making 31 out of a possible 35 on the "hour glass" series, seven shots at 600 yards.

Pte. Tyers of the 10th Toronto Regiment in the "Hour Glass" series scored 33.

Sergt. G. Mortimer of the same regiment, firing in the "Ladies" competition, ten shots at 1,000 yards, made 33. For the "J. H. Steward" silver challenge cup, seven shots at 600 yards, his card showed 34.

In the "Gregory" competition, seven shots at 200 yards, Color-Sergt. A. G. Gardner of the 63rd Sherbrooke Regiment scored 34, and Staff-Sergt. Bayles, 10th Royal Grenadiers, a possible.

Color-Sergt. W. H. Youhill, 90th Regiment, Winnipeg, in the service rifle "Association Cup" series, seven shots at each of 200 and 600 yards, scored 33 at the shorter distance and 31 at the other. Staff-Sergt. Crowe totalled 45.

Staff-Sergt. Bayles made another possible in the "Skilled Shots" series.

Lives to Be 100.

Aylmer, July 13.—A notable birthday reception will be that of Arch. McTaggart, of the second concession of Malahide, who will be one hundred years old on Friday next. He was born near Inverness, Scotland.

Pleaded Guilty.

St. Catharines, July 13.—Henry Sevenpiper pleaded guilty to stealing $96 from his brother-in-law, Jacob Honsberger of Jordan, and was sent to the Central for three months by Judge Carman. Sevenpiper worked as a farm hand for Honsberger and stole the money from a drawer in the house.

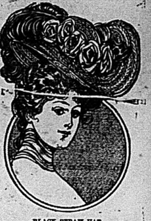
FOR WARMER DAYS.

Coats of Taffeta in Light Shades. Tailor Mades of Linen.

Paquin is making some pretty coats of taffeta in every dainty shade. They are ruched and befringed with a thousand minute details.

Tailor mades of linen or pongee are being made for well known society women. They are relieved with embroideries and touches of vivid green or scarlet.

The long shoulder is often unbecoming, and it is only the tall and willowy figure which is benefited by this style, but the long shouldered effect can be obtained in a very pretty way by building the yoke out with the trimming on the sleeve or in trimming the top of the sleeves with an elongated drapery.



BLACK STRAW HAT.

Most of the blouses made of thin material have a double sleeve, and the undersleeve is generally tight fitting and nearly covered by frills of lace. One of the favorite waists of the moment is entirely made of shirrings, with the yoke and undersleeves of embroidery.

Gowns inlet with both black and white lace are very popular this season. One of those seen recently was of peach colored crepe de chine trimmed with chiffon of the same shade and medallions of black and white chantilly lace.

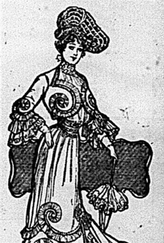
Dark muslins for promenade wear will be particularly fashionable this season, and the newest models have no trimming on the skirts with the exception of one or two flounces. Very effective was a dark blue gown with a scattered rose design, the flounces on the skirt being headed with ruchings of pink taffeta, and a fichu draped round the shoulders was similarly adorned.

The picture shows a black straw hat trimmed with pale yellow roses and a black feather. JUDIC CHOLLET.

MODES AND MATERIALS.

Leading Facts of the Dressmaking World—Grenadine In Favor.

Without a doubt the 1830 modes lead. This is clearly seen in the long shoulder, the drooping full sleeve, the gathered skirts trimmed with their deep tucks, the tiny roses used in trimming both gowns and hats and the deep waistbands.



AFTERNOON GOWN.

Veilings of chiffon and cloudy tinted lace make the evening dress of the moment a thing of rare beauty.

The woman with a limited dress allowance cannot do better than to have a black, gray or old fashioned glace silk made up with the full plaited skirt of the moment joined to the full waist blousing over a wide waist and with its sleeves a mass of tiny frills.

The chief features of the evening gown are the fichu, the waistband and the sleeves. Sometimes, in the case of an evening dress of expensive silk or chiffon cloth, two bodices are made, one low, the other high, for less dressy functions. Our grandmothers made a point of having at least one silk gown in their wardrobe, and this season we are following their example.

Very novel is the combination of Bulgarian embroidery and leather in the season's belts. A very pretty effect was obtained by having the sides of the belt of black kid, the inner side scalloped and the center of loose linen worked in bright colors, the belt fastened in front with two narrow kid straps and gun metal buttons. Kid of all colors is also used for the edges of satin belts.

The picture shows an afternoon gown of voile trimmed with kiltings of taffeta and galloon and finished with white lace. JUDIC CHOLLET.

JUDGE WINCHESTER AND THE ALIEN LABOR ENQUIRY.

Men of Canada Able and Willing to Build Our Railways.

Prominent Railway Engineers Testify to the Excellent Qualifications Possessed by Canadian Engineers—Mr Stephens, Apparently, Did Not Go About Getting Canadian Engineers in the Usual Way or He Would Have Got Them.

Toronto, July 14.—The enquiry into the employment of aliens as engineers on the Grand Trunk Pacific surveys was continued here yesterday by Judge Winchester in his chambers in the City Hall. H. M. Mowat, K.C., appeared on behalf of the Dominion Government, and W. H. Biggar represented the company. Evidence was taken all day of experienced engineers and surveyors, who showed very clearly that it was entirely unnecessary to go outside of Canada to obtain competent men, and that Mr. Stephens, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, was entirely mistaken when he said that he employed aliens only when unable to secure capable Canadians. There were many engineers present, and the proceedings were watched with great interest.

W. T. Jennings was the first witness called. After 35 years' experience he was decidedly of the opinion that it was entirely unnecessary to go outside of Canada for any officer of any degree required in railroad or other like work. If Mr. Stephens endeavored to obtain Canadians, he did not go about it in the usual way. He mentioned Messrs. Lumsden, McLeod, Shanly and Keating among others as qualified to act as chief engineer. He would not recommend a man who was addicted to the use of liquor.

No Scarcity of Good Men.

Mr. Mackenzie, president of the Canadian Northern Railway, also felt strongly on the liquor question. On his road, he thought, there was not a single alien engineer, and he had had no difficulty in obtaining men.

Reuben W. Leonard had had a long experience, and was promised a district engineership, but had not received the appointment. He mentioned in addition to the names already given, Jno. Woodman, Winnipeg; Geo. A. Mountain, Ottawa; J. M. McCarthy, Quebec; Cecil B. Smith, Nova Scotia; A. E. Dussette, Geo. H. Massey, Montreal, and Hiram Duncan, Sydney, as men qualified to act as chief engineer.

John H. Armstrong, chief engineer of construction on the mountain division of the C.P.R., had written for the position of chief engineer, but his last letter had remained unanswered.

E. H. Keating mentioned a number of names of men who could have filled positions acceptably. If he had been chief engineer he could have filled the junior positions without going outside of Canada.

Plenty of Young Men Available.

Prof. John Galbraith of the School of Practical Science said that there were 480 graduates of that institution, five-sixths of whom were still in Canada, and 280 of these were trained in railroad work. He had kept a record of the graduates and often supplied lists to railway companies. He had done so to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

Thos. E. Hillman said he had had 33 years' experience as a civil engineer in Canada. He served first as a draughtsman on the Great Western Railway in 1870, and was afterwards resident engineer on the London, Huron and Bruce Railway. He had applied in December, 1902, to Chief Engineer Hobson for a position, and went to Montreal in March, 1903, where he saw Mr. Stephens, but no offer was made him. He had no communication with the company afterwards. He did not think that Mr. Stephens had gone about the selection of engineers in a very systematic way.

He Recommended Canadians.

Joseph Hobson, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, said he was consulted in 1902 in reference to a suitable man to take charge of the whole survey. He had recommended Mr. Lumsden and arranged an interview for him with Mr. Hays. He had not been consulted regarding Mr. Stephen's appointment and did not know him. He had spoken only about Mr. Hillman, whom he considered stood very high as a constructing and locating engineer. Being asked as to other reliable men, he said S. H. Armstrong was a good engineer, but could not speak in regard to H. P. Bell. He had a wide knowledge of Canadians in the profession and could have recommended good and capable men for positions under Mr. Stephens.

On cross-examination by Mr. Biggar, Mr. Hobson said that Mr. Lumsden had declined the position offered him before any mention of salary was made. When advised that the salary would be $4,000 he stated that it was too low.

Mr. Biggar offered in evidence some correspondence in which Mr. Hobson recommended a number of provincial land surveyors to Mr. Stephens. Mr. Hobson explained that he had mentioned these names because they were familiar with the country in New Ontario, but the men had not been appointed.

Salary Stopped Conference.

C. B. Smith is a civil engineer and graduated from McGill University 20 years ago. He had lectured there for five years on railroad engineering and wrote an elementary work on the subject. He had also had years of experience on different railways and was now with the Niagara Power Co. He had applied for a position in November, 1902, and had met with Mr. Stephens in February, 1903. He was then getting $3,600, and when Mr. Stephens heard that he said there was no use of conferring any further. He would have accepted the position of division engineer at $4,000, but would not take it now. He considered the appointment of Mr. Stephens was a mistake, as he know nothing of Canadian engineers and could not appreciate them.

Arthur H. N. Bruce of Ottawa, had been constantly employed on railroads during the 15 years he had spent in Canada. He had applied for a position in April, 1903, but simply was advised that his letter had been filed.

Had Better Job.

A. F. McCallum had seen Mr. McGuigan in Toronto and arranged to see Mr. Stephens in Montreal. Before the interview, however, he took a position with the C.P.R. at $150 per month and was not anxious to change. He would not accept less than a position as district engineer at $250 per month, and Mr. Stephens could not engage him.

A. W. Campbell, the assistant commissioner of Public Works for Ontario, could not understand Mr. Stephens saying that he could not get good Canadians to fill positions. His chief trouble on the Temiskaming and Northern Railway was to pick out the best men from the number of applicants. He had secured as chief engineer W. B. Russell of the Algoma Central for $3,000; Mr. Perrault as his assistant at $1,800 and men in charge of sections at $1,200.

James McDougall, engineer for York County, had not applied for a position, but was sure that Mr. Stephen's opinion of Canadian engineers was incorrect. He went over a list of competent men and spoke especially of the merit of M. P. Bell.

John A. Paterson, K.C., produced correspondence had by his brother, Jas. A. Paterson, C.E., with the railway officials. Owing to his inability to secure a position his brother had been expatriated to the United States, but was anxious to return. Mr. Paterson said that Mr. Stephens must have been mistaken in writing a letter stating his brother had been offered but declined a position.

John MacConnell had had seven years' experience in harbor work and 12 on railways in Britain, South America and Canada. He would have been willing to take the position at Port Arthur, secured by Mr. Bacon from the United States, and the salary of $3,600 annually was sufficient.

Harry Crewe had 30 years' experience in railway work and agreed enturely with the previous witnesses as to the capability and plentiful supply of Canadian engineers.

John L. Boyd, Harry G. Dinsdale and A. L. McLennan also gave testimony of applications for positions which were not accepted. They were experienced men on location and construction work.

Several witnesses called were not present and Judge Winchester announced that he had a telegram from Hugh S. Lumsden from Orillia regretting his inability to be present, but stating that he would arrange to attend as soon as possible. The Judge said he would not conclude the taking of evidence without hearing Mr. Lumsden. He would sit at Kingston on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, when there would be about a dozen witnesses to examine and would take Mr. Lumsden's testimoney whenever he was able to attend in Toronto.

Berlin Through English Spectacles.

An Englishman writes of Berlin: "It is the only modern city I know of that has managed to escape looking artificial. The labor of building greater Berlin has been most dexterously hidden. There is very little of the deadly uniformity, the Euclidian lines, the prosaic precision, one notices in New York. Berlin is something considerably better than a mere chessboard of brick and stone and mortar. The streets have a curved and enticing spaciousness; they are shaded with avenues of trees, faultlessly asphalted and clean with a cleanliness surpassing that of Paris. The architecture is rather too florid for English tastes, but for all that decidedly effective, and a drive from Unter den Linden to Charlottenburg will take one past a finer succession of houses than either London or New York can show."

Mad as a Hatter.

The phrase "mad as a hatter" has no reference to that respectable artist who designs the crowning article of civilized male attire, but relates back to the Anglo-Saxon word "atter" (an adder, or viper). "Mad" was formerly used as a synonym for violent or venomous and is still used in that sense in some parts of England as well as in this country. The phrase, therefore, strictly means as "venomous as a viper," the old form, "mad as an atter," having been corrupted to "mad as a hatter." "In that direction," the cat said, waving its right paw round, "lives a hatter, and in that direction," waving the other paw, "lives a March hare. Visit either you like. They're both mad."

Perils of "Self Doctoring."

Large numbers of people in prosperous circumstances die as sexagenarians from maladies which are evidences of degeneration and of premature senility, while many who pass this period go on to enter upon an eighth or ninth decade of life. The former class comprise those who have lived without restraint of their appetites and who have sought to allay some of the consequences by self medication, while the latter class comprise those who have lived reasonably and who, if annoyed by imperfect digestion, have sought relief by abandoning the errors from which it sprang.—London Lancet.

Business and Pleasure.

"So you want to change the door so it will swing the other way, eh?" said the carpenter. "Don't it work all right?"

"Yes, it works all right," grinned the dentist, "but I want it changed so I can have the word 'Pull' lettered on it. See?"

Mean.

Mrs. Buxom—That hateful Mrs. Knox made a very mean comment upon my age today. Mr. Buxom—Did she say you were getting old? Mrs. Buxom—No, indeed. She said I "still looked quite young."

Peace at Last.

Mr. Hoon—Scrappington and his wife have parted. Mrs. Hoon—Good gracious! What is the trouble? Mr. Hoon—There isn't any trouble now. They have parted.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

In the matter of the estate of John George Frost, late of the city of Belleville, in the County of Hastings, furniture dealer, deceased, notice is hereby given pursuant to the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, chapter 129, that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of the said John George Frost, who died on or about the 10th day of May, 1904, are required on or before the 30th day of July, 1904, to send by post, prepaid or delivered, to H. Parker Thomas, Esq., of the City of Belleville, Ont., Solicitor for Margaret Frost, sole executrix of the last will and testament of the said deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, the statement of their accounts, and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them, verified by Statutory declaration.

And further take notice that after such last mentioned date the said executrix will proceed to distribute the assets of the deceased among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which she shall then have notice, and that the said executrix will not be liable for the said assets, or any part thereof, to any person or persons of whose claims notice shall not have been received by her at the time of such distribution.

Catching Kites In India.

In India, where those large birds, the kites, are common and fearless, boys amuse themselves by catching them in a way that is almost ridiculous in its simplicity. A line is stretched tightly a little way above the ground between two posts. Beneath it is laid a bait. The kite stoops and seizes the bait, but when he rises from the earth hits the back of his neck against the string. This makes him throw up his wings, with the result that some of the quills get over the line, and he is kept a suspended and struggling captive until the boys run up and release him.

Music as an Aid to Ideas.

At evening parties a man's shyness is mitigated by music. In my own experience, when some stray man and I have stood together speechless, no sooner did the piano break into our appalling silence than ideas seemed to inundate us. The dumb man spoke as if by magic, and I, who hitherto had nothing to say, couldn't talk fast enough.—Mrs. John Lane in Fortnightly Review.

Too Wise For Her Years.

The Governess—Of course, you know, the story we have just read is merely a fairy tale and there are many such quite familiar to childhood. Can you tell us another, Elsie? Little Elsie—Oh, yes; you once told mamma that you had four proposals of marriage during your life!

THE INTERCOLONIAL.

The Intercolonial Railway has always been a source of loss to Canada, owing to the political atmosphere which surrounds it. The employment of many more men than are necessary to do its work has added to the cost of operation. The Liberals, after being returned to power, commenced to spend money like water to bring the road up to modern requirements. In the ten months of the year ending April 30th, 1903, the Intercolonial earned $5,292,639 and expended on maintenance account $5,288,763. For the ten months ending April 30th, 1904, the Intercolonial earned $5,287,521 and spent $5,835,294. This means that the Government railway from Halifax to Montreal has gone back in its earning capacity in the corresponding periods of ten months of the last two years, $5,118. It shows, too, that it has made a gain in expenditure of $546,531 for the same periods. The people of Canada have been approached, during the years that have elapsed since 1896, with the plea that the prosperity of the country has been unprecedented. Miles of sidings have been added to the Intercolonial to meet the rapidly growing output of the industries which are springing up along the line. Receipts should therefore show an increase. But what are the facts? The income has actually diminished. This state of affairs can only be attributed to the mismanagement of the acting Minister of Railways, Hon. W. S. Fielding, and the utter incapacity of the present Minister, Hon. H. R. Emmerson. The Intercolonial, according to the oft repeated views of Mr. Emmerson, is a money making institution. This can only lead to one conclusion, that the management of those who have succeeded Mr. Blair, who has been described as the ablest railway expert in Canada, has been on the whole abnormally bad. It suggests that the Liberal party has lost its usefulness as a governing body in Canada and it affords another reason for the overthrow of the Laurier regime at the coming elections.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The speed at which some automobiles run in this city has become a subject of comment, and many people think the City Council should pass a by-law regulating the running of the horseless carriages. This should hardly be necessary. The by-law which prohibits reckless driving should also cover the reckless running of autos. In the province of Quebec the Legislature has fixed the speed of motor cars, in cities, at six miles an hour. This matter should be at once looked into by our civic authorities, and, if the speed of the machines is not regulated by any existing ordinance one should be passed without delay.

This matter, of course, will probably right itself in time, but it is a very serious question to many who drive horses in this vicinity at present. Several runaways have taken place already, and in more than one case loss of life has been narrowly averted. The consequence of one of these accidents may be far-reaching. A horse, running away, may run down and seriously injure pedestrians, in addition to breaking the bones of its driver and the occupants of the carriage. Nothing, perhaps, can be done in the matter further than to insist that all drivers of automobiles go at moderate speed and do all in their power to prevent the frightening of horses, such as stopping when they see that an animal close to them is becoming restive. Nothing in this world suffers through the application of a little common sense, and automobiling is no exception to the rule.

The latest comic song out, we see, is one bearing the restful title of "His Day's Work Was Done." Here is a sample verse, and it will be seen that the song lends itself beautifully to parodies:

I often lie abed and think what an awful thing is work
I know a lot who've started it and finished with a jerk
There's Reckless Bob he got a job to drive a motor car
Said "Hang the police, I'll let them see I know what motors are."
One hundred miles an hour he went and quite enjoyed his fun
A load of hay got in his way and his day's work was done.

Young Willie Smith one morning went to see the logs come down
He was a most precocious boy—
lived in the east side of town
Young Will stood on the footbridge old—you know the place I mean
Where the rail is gone and you'll tumble through unless you're very keen
Just then some jackass rocked the bridge and thought it mighty fun
But mamma's pride through the hole did glide and his day's work was done.

"A Constant Reader," writes Timely Topics:

"I am pleased to see the stand you have taken on the demand or request, if you so please to call it, of the Treasurer to the City Council to pay money which it is his duty to pay himself. We have had in the past too much of this kind of thing. Men have caballed and schemed to get other people's positions by offers of performing the duties pertaining to the office for less money than was being paid, but no sooner was the position secured than applications were made, either directly or indirectly, as in the present case, for supplementary remuneration. It is time this kind of financial manoeuvring was stamped out. I do not say the Treasurer gets too high a salary, but he sought and accepted the office at what he is paid; if not satisfied let him resign."

"Constant Reader" is right, and it shall be The Intelligencer's effort to stop the practice if possible.

A small party from this city, which is camping near Massassaga, had troubles recently. The members of the party were out fishing when they observed some cattle in the vicinity of their camp. Hurriedly they pulled for the shore, but alas! when they arrived at their tent it was to discover that the bulk of their provisions was either eaten or spoiled. One intelligent cow, it is said, was actually trying to use a can opener on some of the canned stuff when driven away.

Oom Paul Kruger is dead. The old man's sins, both of omission and commission, have been many, and he was no friend of Britain at any time in his life. But he was a brave man and withal a crafty one. The world was little better for his coming into it, and will be but little worse for his going out. Perhaps, in the land beyond the Styx the old man may meet the justice which failed to reach him in this world.

Sir Frederick Borden still keeps at it. In a speech on the Militia Bill the other day, he said, discussing the proposed uniform for Canadian volunteers, "He did not see why we should adhere to the British regimental uniform, which had no traditional interest for us." Great Mars! What a speech! The British uniform has "no traditional interest for us." And there are in Canada thousands of men and women whose ancestors fought with Wellington and in the Crimea! They have "no traditional interest" in the uniform and glories of the British army! Surely the knight of the dog biscuit must have a bee in his bonnet.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

RUMOR THAT PORT ARTHUR HAS FALLEN IS NOT PROBABLE—THE FLIGHT AT MOTIEN PASS.

(The Globe.)

The Russians continue the circulation of the story that the Japanese met with tremendous losses in a recent assault on Port Arthur. Count Cassini, Russian Ambassador to the United States, says the news came from Japanese sources to Admiral Alexieff, and that the losses neared the enormous total of 30,000 men. If the loss was half of that indicated the assault on Port Arthur was the most deadly affair since Gettysburg. There is not a word either of confirmation or denial from the Japanese, who have preserved marvellous silence as to the progress of the siege of Port Arthur ever since the occupation of Dalny six weeks ago. The rumor in the London papers this morning that Port Arthur has fallen is no more probable than the Russian story of Japanese losses. When Port Arthur falls the whole world will hear of it without an hour's delay.

Elsewhere the campaign goes all in favor of Japan. Lloyds' agent at Newchwang announces that Japanese scouts had approached within six miles of the city yesterday morning, and that Oku is marching toward Newchwang with 50,000 men in his command. This movement must of necessity result in the evacuation by the Russians of all the territory south of Haicheng, and the concentration of Kuropatkin's army in very compact order around Haicheng and Liaoyang.

Belated accounts of the fight in the Motien Pass a week ago indicate that the action must have been, on a small scale, a good deal like that of Inkerman in the Crimea. The Russians, hidden by darkness and mist, gathered in the pass and surprised the Japanese, who hurried, half clothed, into their trenches and redoubts and forced back the foe with the bayonet and clubbed rifles. Thrice was the conflict renewed, but in the end the Japanese, like the British in the Crimea, held their positions and the assailants retreated. There seems still to be a place in war for cold steel, notwithstanding the increased range of the rifle. A feature of the story worth noting, in face of the tales of cruelty and the mutilation of dead and wounded on other fields, is that the Japanese bearers brought in the Russian wounded as well as their own and treated them in the most considerate fashion.

A Missionary Talks.

Rev. C. F. Cheeizzle, B. S. C., an Abyssinian missionary, who is in the city, last evening gave an address at Holloway Street Church relating to the work which is being done in that country. It was both an interesting and profitable address. Rev. Geo. Brown presided over the meeting, which was well attended.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—Quotations for Cattle Easier at Montreal.

London, July 13.—Canadian cattle are steady at 11¼c to 13c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 10¼c to 10c; sheep, 10½c to 12c, dressed weight.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, July 13.—About 800 cattle, 330 calves, 25 milch cows, 900 sheep and lambs and 200 fat hogs were offered for sale at the East End Abattoir to-day. Prices of good cattle were fully ¼c per lb. lower than on Monday's market.

Prime beeves sold at 5c to 5¼c per lb., but only three very choice animals brought 5¼c; good mediums sold at 4¼c to 4¾c; ordinary mediums at 3¾c to 4c; common stock, 2¾c to 3¼c; old, lean cows, 2¼c.

Milch cows are dull of sale and bring $5 to $10 less than during the early spring.

Good calves were unusually plentiful. One of these sold at $15, and 10 others at $12. Common calves sold at $2 to $6 each.

Shipping sheep brought 3¾c per lb., and the others 3c to 3¼c. Lambs sold at $2.25 to $4.25 each.

Good lots of fat hogs sold at 5¼c to 5¼c per lb.; heavy fats at about 4½c, and sows at 3¾c.

Woodstock, July 13.—At meeting of the cheese board, held here this afternoon, 18 factories boarded 2573 boxes colored and 835 boxes white cheese; 7¾c to 8c asked; 500 boxes sold at 7 11-16c.

The West Wants Rain.

Winnipeg, July 14.—More rain is badly needed in many sections of Manitoba and the Territories, according to latest report from the west. In fact, in some sections actual damage is being done through drouth. The districts affected are mostly in the northwest of Manitoba, in the northern sections of the Territories and around Moose Jaw. In Southern Manitoba wheat is heading out well and the yield will be good. Local grain men say if there is no rain within ten days the situation will be serious.

Fashions among the native tribes of South Africa are thus described by a recent writer: "During one season the people are all wearing safety pins as earrings; the next season no one will look at them, for pins are 'out' and buttons are 'in.' In one tribe blue spotted cotton handkerchiefs are all the rage, but fifty miles away no one will look at such things—they want cotton shirts. The only universal ornament, perhaps, consists in beadwork. Some tribes, such as the Fingoes and Zulus, take to beadwork more than others; the one thing they are all consistent in is a strangely good taste for color combination. They never indulge in a combination of gaudy colors, never affect an inharmonious color scheme, thus bearing out Ruskin's statement that bad taste in color does not arise in people who are left to themselves and nature." Hairdressing is a prodigious business among them. The process is assisted by a liberal use of red clay, and as the perfected work of art is expected to last a month the head is permitted to rest on the nape of the neck only when the owner sleeps.

Voting in the Commons.

In the British house of commons, as soon as the question to be decided is put from the chair, a clerk at the table sets in motion a huge sand glass, familiarly known to members as the "egg boiler," probably because it takes three minutes to run out. As the last sand runs through the glass the sergeant-at-arms instantly locks the massive oak doors of the chamber and only those members who have succeeded in getting through the doorway can vote.

A Prudent Youngster.

"And you say the teacher whipped you cruelly?"

"Yes, dad."

"Show me the marks."

"I can't, dad. There ain't no marks."

"No marks?"

"No, dad. You see, I was dressed for it."

Settled.

Old Gentleman (at his daughter's wedding)—My dear, I don't see how I am to get along without you. Bride—Oh, that's all right, pa. Since the ceremony was performed my husband has confessed that he hasn't enough saved to start housekeeping, so you won't lose me after all.

Humiliation.

"I tell you, sir, kissing the hand that smites you is nothing to what I saw in this hotel this morning."

"What was that?"

"The porter blacking the boots that had kicked him last night."

A Lovable Character.

Singleton—How did you come to fall in love with your wife? Littleton—I married her for her money and afterward discovered that she possessed twice as much as she claimed to have.—Puck.

When He Gets It.

Visitor—Does mamma give you anything for being a good boy? Tommy—No, mum; she gives it to me when I ain't.

Plenty of Trials.

Sillicus—Life is full of trials. Cynicus—Yes, but there are not half enough convictions.

Much More Than That.

"That milk looks as if it were half water," protested the woman at the kitchen door.

"It is much more than that, ma'am," replied the milkman, a college graduate in reduced circumstances. "I guarantee it to be 86 per cent water, 4 per cent butter, 3½ per cent casein and 6½ per cent sugar and various salts, the combination resulting in the liquid commonly known as milk. Chemical analysis of the same cheerfully furnished whenever desired. Good morning, ma'am."

The Cunning of Ants.

A naturalist found black ants were devouring the skins of some bird specimens on a table, so he made tar circles on four pieces of paper and put one under each leg of the table. Ants will not cross tar. Pretty soon he found the ants busily at work again and, looking at the tar circles, found each one was bridged by bits of sand which the clever ants had brought in from the street.

His Little Postscript.

The absentminded correspondent of the Georgia citizen in Texas closed a recent communication as follows: "P. S.—I almost forgot to tell you that your house was burned to the ground one day last week, your brother having let the insurance lapse two weeks before. So you won't git nothing out of it, I reckon."

Unaccountable Surprise.

"Some men never learn by experience."

"That's true," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "Charley is just as much surprised every time he loses at the races as if it had never happened before."

Discriminating Maid.

Mrs. Madison—Your new maid appears to be rather refined. Mrs. Parkweste—Yes; she's a little out of the common. She never breaks anything but the costliest cut glass and the choicest Dresden.

It is easy to take a joke in the spirit in which it is intended if it is on the other fellow.

When Animals Faint.

The little gray dog tumbled headlong into the area, and the maid who happened to be standing there closed the gate. When the dog saw she was safe from her two legged pursuers she toppled over in a dead faint. At any rate, the maid insisted that she fainted. The boarders, who crowded out into the area to help bring the little animal to, derided the assertion, but the doctor that finally joined the group said there was nothing preposterous about it.

"Of course she fainted," he said. "Lots of animals faint. Cats and dogs and even more stolid animals keel over in moments of fear and exhaustion. In the case of horses the prostration is generally attributed to sunstroke, but quite often they are knocked out by a plain, everyday faint instead of atmospherical excesses. Fowls faint too, and the birds of the air. In fact, it is hard to find any living creature that doesn't topple over in crucial circumstances. If the lioness of the jungle were up on etiquette she would be just as much justified in carrying a camphor bottle as the finest lady in the land."

Faculty of Imitation In Animals.

Some animals have wonderful powers of imitation. Dogs brought up in the company of cats have been known to acquire the trick of licking the paws and then washing the face. When a cat has been taught to sit up for food her kittens have been known to imitate her action. Darwin tells of a cat that was in the habit of putting her paw into the mouth of a narrow milk pitcher every time she got the chance and then licking the cream off her paw. Her kitten soon learned the same trick. A lady tells of a rabbit that she keeps in a cage with a monkey and says that Bunnie has caught many of the monkey's ways. It is said that starving pigeons that have been brought up on grain will not eat peas to save their lives, but that if pea eating pigeons are put with them they follow their example and eat peas.

Washington Could Run.

"As to running," said Parson Weems in his book on George Washington, "the swift footed Achilles could scarcely have matched his speed. 'Egad, he ran wonderfully!' said my amiable and aged friend, John Fitzhugh, Esq., who knew him well. 'We had nobody hereabouts who could come near him. There was young Langhorn Dade of Westmoreland, a confounded, clean made, tight young fellow and a mighty swift runner, too; but, then, he was no match for George. Langy, indeed, did not like to give up and would brag that sometimes he had brought George to a tie. But I believe he was mistaken, for I have seen them run together many a time, and George always beat him easy enough.'"

An Elephant's Toothache.

I have in my possession an elephant's tooth, partially decayed. The animal belonged to my father, who was in the East Indian civil service at Moradabad, and as the tooth caused the animal so much pain that it interfered with its eating my father, with the assistance of the mahout's son sitting on the elephant's head and telling him to be quiet, extracted the tooth by means of hammer, iron bar and rope. The grateful animal used to like to have his gums dressed with tow and gin for days after the operation. As this happened before 1842, no anaesthetic could have been used.—London Field.

London Built on Sponges.

One could surely find no worse ground to build upon than a bed of sponges such as we use for the bath. And yet London has for its subsoil only sponges, although we call them flints. Once they grew as sponges do now in salt water shallows, and they are found in layers petrified among the chalk of southern England. The Thames valley chalk has been melted like so much sugar and carried away with the running waters, but the flints have been left behind, and on these the whole city of London has found its excellent foundations.

Nearly Sad.

A newspaper in a small country town not far from New York employs a reporter whose knowledge of English idioms is somewhat uncertain. He was assigned recently to report the sudden death of an important local citizen, and after describing the circumstances leading up to it he referred to the sadness of the bereavement sustained by the family. "The widow," he concluded, "is almost grief stricken."

Out of Place.

Aunt Prisms—I am shocked at you, Maude. You permitted young Mr. Jones to kiss you. Maude—He only just touched me on the nose, auntie. Aunt Prisms—It was quite out of place, dear. Maude—He knew it was, auntie. But you came in so suddenly, you see.

THAT AWFUL DEPRESSION

Which Mrs. Grenery experienced is but the story that thousands could tell of their sufferings from Dyspepsia. Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets is the panacea.

"I have proved Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets to be the only effective remedy for my dyspepsia. I have used most everything I could hear of, but these tablets "touch the spot" and take away the awful depression and distress in almost quicker time than it takes to tell it. You may publish this that all sufferers from Indigestion and Dyspepsia may find the relief I did. Mrs. M. Grenery, 51 Alice St., Toronto.

TIMELY TOPICS.

"Those Wednesday half holidays are all right," says the man on the next block, "but I think that next year, they'd better give us Thursday morning, too. That's when I seem to need the holiday most."

Mr. Monet, Grit M.P., threatens to retire, but the Liberals don't care. They'll have plenty of money when the G.T.P. Bill passes.

* * *

A London Journal called "The New Age" is giving great comfort to the Government organs in this country, by denouncing Lord Dundonald and commending the Canadian administration for dismissing him. The editor of "The New Age," who was in Canada last year, was one of the most blatant and offensive pro-Boers in England. He was worse than Stead, who publicly over and over again expressed his wish for the defeat of the British in Africa. That explains it. All enemies of the Empire are opposed to Dundonald.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

To the Big Fair---St. Louis Exposition.

From all Ontario and Quebec points the Grand Trunk Railway is the recognized route for Canadians. It is the standard of railroad excellence. Intending visitors to St. Louis should see that their tickets read via Grand Trunk and Illinois Central. For full particulars write J. D. McDonald, D.P.A., Union Station, Toronto.

HE COULD PREACH.

At First He Thought He Couldn't, but Changed His Opinion.

In the early days of Methodism in the west a circuit rider, if he had a large field to cover, was sometimes permitted to have a colleague, who was frequently a young minister, just beginning to preach. The Rev. John Thompson was a circuit rider in a somewhat thinly settled portion of central Illinois more than fifty years ago. The colleague assigned to him was Brother James Smith, an excellent young man, but with very little experience as a preacher.

One Sunday Mr. Thompson had an appointment at a small meeting house in the country, but having a severe cold he asked his young assistant to go along with him and preach the sermon, and the latter, as in duty bound, obeyed orders.

Brother Smith had never undertaken to preach in the presence of his more experienced colaborer, and when, after the opening services, he rose and gave out his text he was visibly embarrassed.

He stammered through a few sentences, hesitated, made another attempt and came to a dead stop.

"What's the use, brethren?" he said, sitting down. "I can't preach!"

Brother Thompson saw that the case was one in which heroic measures were necessary.

"Young man," he whispered sternly in his ear, "you get up again and preach that sermon or I'll take you out in the grove after this meeting is over and give you a hard spanking, as sure as your name is Smith!"

An electric shock could not have operated quicker. Brother Smith rose to his feet again, his hesitation all gone, and in ringing tones he preached a sermon that is still remembered by aged survivors of that old time congregation as the most fervid and eloquent discourse they ever heard so young a man deliver.—Youth's Companion.

THE ORIFLAMB.

A Standard That Has Played a Conspicuous Part In History.

The Carlovingian standard was really no other than the oriflamb, which has played so conspicuous a part in French history, but was not formally adopted until 1082, in the reign of Philip I. It consisted of a red or crimson flag, mountd on a gilded staff, the flag being cut into three "vandykes," to represent "tongues of fire," with a silken tassel between each.

The old romance writers pretended that the infidel was blinded by merely looking upon it. In the "Roman de Garin" the Saracens are made to exclaim, "If we only see it, we shall be dead men," and Froissart affirms that as soon as it was unfurled at Rosbecque the fog vanished from the French line of battle, leaving their enemies still shrouded in darkness.

Thus red, the color which the church has consecrated to her martyrs, became in its turn the color of the French kings. They wore it on their coats of arms through the whole period of the crusades and as late as the closing decade of the fourteenth century were still faithful to this "glorious blazon."

The famous Du Guesclin, fighting against the English in Poitou, wore the red cross, while his adversaries wore the white. But after the great defeat at Agincourt in 1415 the French kings abandoned the oriflamb, because it had been assumed by Henry V. and his successors, and adopted white as a national color when England had discarded it. This is a curious but little known historical fact.—All the Year Round.

Teeth as Sentinels.

"When thou sittest to eat with a ruler consider diligently him that is before thee," says the Hebrew proverb, warning a king's guest to regulate his appetite by his host's temper. Boswell, Dr. Johnson's biographer, gives in his notebook a modern paraphrase of the old Jewish proverb: "I said of a rich man who entertained us luxuriously that, although he was exceedingly ridiculous, we restrained ourselves from talking of him as we might do lest we should lose his feasts. 'He makes our teeth sentinels on our tongues,' said I."

An Endless Chain.

"Isn't that the same suit you had last year, Uncle Peter?" the agent for sewing machines inquired.

The postmaster, storekeeper, town clerk and iceman looked at him in silence for a moment. "Yes, sir," he said at last in a chilly tone. "It is the same suit I had last year, and it is the same suit you asked me last year if it wasn't the same suit I had the year before. Now, have you got any more questions to ask, or will they hold over till next season?"

Men and Gossip.

"Why do men never gossip?" asked the woman who regards her husband as a great and good man.

"Because," answered Miss Cayenne, "they are too indolent. They insist on sending their wives out to get the news for them."

Two Men.

"That fellow yonder"—

"What of him?"

"Just rich enough to be miserable. But the fellow standing near him is"—

"What?"

"Just poor enough to be resigned."

Short.

"Why does Mr. Spatt wear such short trousers?"

"Because they fit him. I asked him for a small loan, and he said he was so short his corns made his head ache."—London Tit-Bits.

A WONDERFUL ANIMAL.

The Turtle Is a Peculiar Creature In Many Respects.

Almost alone among God's creatures, the turtle has but a single enemy—man. It does not seem to matter to the turtle whether he stays beneath the surface for an hour or a week, nor does it trouble him to spend an equal time on land if the need arises. He is neither fish, flesh nor fowl, yet his flesh partakes of the characteristics of all three. Eating seems a mere superfluity with him, since for weeks at a time he may be headed up in a barrel (with the bung out) and emerge after his long fast apparently none the worse for his enforced abstinence from food, from light and almost from air, and, finally, it may be truly said that of all the higher, warm blooded organisms there is none so tenacious of life as the turtle. I can truly say that I have seen the flesh cleared out of a turtle shell and hung up on a tree, where for hours the quivering, convulsive movements of the muscles went on. Not only so, but on one occasion only the head and tail were left attached to the shell. Some time had elapsed since the meat had been cut out of the carapace, and no one could have imagined that any life remained in the extremities. But a young Dane, noticing that the down hanging head had its mouth wide open, very foolishly inserted two fingers between those horny mandibles. They closed, and our shipmate was two fingers short. The edges of the turtle's jaw had taken them off clean, with only the muscular power remaining in the head. Signor Redi once cut a turtle's head off and noted that it lived for twenty-three days without a head, and another whose brain he removed lived for six months, apparently unconscious that it had suffered any loss.—Leslie's Monthly.

BALLOON SPIDERS.

They Voyage at Great Heights Over Sea as Well as Land.

Given a steady breeze and a free course, there is practically no limit to the distance which a ballooning spider may traverse. The writer has taken orb weavers from their snuggeries under divers sheltering projections at the highest attainable point on the dome of St. Peter's in Rome, whither they had doubtless been carried by the wind when younglings. One may see flecks of gossamer afloat at far greater heights. Seafaring folk often note spider balloons speeding by them at sea or entangled upon various parts of the vessel. Darwin, in his famous voyage of the Beagle, when sixty miles from land saw great numbers of small spiders with their webs. When they first came in contact with the rigging they were seated upon threads, and while hanging to these the slightest breath of air would bear them out of sight. Thus, though so far from land, the wee voyagers were still moving on over the main.

A steamship captain told the writer of a like observation made by him. While sailing along the eastern coast of South America during the month of March his ship was covered with innumerable spider webs. He was then more than 200 miles from land, about 400 miles south of the equator. The wind was blowing from the continent. "The spiders seemed like elongated balls," said the captain, "with a sort of umbrella canopy above them. They settled upon the sails and rigging and finally disappeared as they came. You know," he added, "that it is not unusual for birds to be blown out to sea. How much easier for a spider, provided he has the means to keep himself suspended in the air."—H. C. McCook, LL. D., in Harper's Magazine.

Bees Used In War.

There are at least two recorded instances in which bees have been used as weapons of defense in war. When the Roman general Lucullus was warring against Mithridates, he sent a force against the city of Themiscyra. As they besieged the walls the inhabitants threw down on them myriads of swarms of bees. These at once began an attack, which resulted in the raising of the siege. These doughty little insects were also once used with equal success in England. Chester was besieged by the Danes and Norwegians, but its Saxon defenders threw down on them the beehives of the town, and the siege was soon raised.

Times Have Changed.

Once upon a time a superstition existed that a lady ought to blame herself if a man whom she did not intend to accept proposed to her, but that, should such an unpleasant incident occur, it was at least not to be made a subject of gossip among her acquaintances. Parents thought it incumbent upon them to let a man understand in time if they did not wish him as a son-in-law. It is needless to remark that such honorable reticence and kindly prudence are quite out of fashion.—London Standard.

Why He Remained Home.

Model Husband (boastfully) -- Yes, gentlemen, I've been married ten years and never spent a night away from home yet.

Doubting Thomas—Large and interesting family, eh?

"Only three of us."

"Have one child, eh?"

"No; the other is my wife's mother."

Optimistic.

Young Lawyer—Well, the judge has rendered a decision in our favor in that will case. Older Partner—Never mind. The other side will appeal, and we will continue to get fees out of it.—Puck.

Honesty is the best policy, but he who is governed by that maxim is not an honest man.—Whately.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) me while I work and save for a home for us both. Will you, Telly?"

But the plaintive face was turned away, perhaps to hide the tears. Then an arm stole around her waist, and as he drew her close she whispered, "When I am no longer needed here, if you want me then I will come to you."

She was sobbing, her head resting on his shoulder, and as he kissed her unresisting lips a boat's sharp whistle broke the sacred spell.

"Go a little way back, my darling," he whispered, "until the boat is gone. I do not want any one to see you have been crying."

When her misty eyes could no longer see the boat that bore her heart away, she turned, and all the long, lonely way back love's tears lingered on her lashes.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE mountains around Sandgate were aflame with the scarlet and gold of autumn before life seemed quite as usual to Alice Page. The summer idyl had passed, and though it left a scar on her heart she had resolutely determined to put the sweet illusion out of her mind. "I was very foolish to let him see that I cared," she thought, "for it can never be, and by and by he will forget me, or if he does think of me it will be to recall me as one of his summer girls who had a fit of silliness."

Her heart ached at times, and in spite of all resolution her fingers would once in awhile stray to the chords of "Ben Bolt." She answered his letters in a cool, matter of fact way. Occasionally, when he referred to his heart hunger and how hard he was studying in hopes that she might think better of him, she wished that he had no purse proud and haughty mother to stand between him and a poor girl, and her next letter would be more chilly than ever. What perhaps was a bitter sweet thought was the fact that the colder she answered him the warmer his next letter would be. He happened to mention once that his mother had spoken of a certain young lady, who belonged to the cream of Boston society, as an eligible match and advised him to show her a little attention. It did not help his cause.

How grateful she was all through those melancholy autumn days that she had a large school to absorb her thoughts. She was having a long and hard fight with her own feelings, and imagined she had conquered them when Thanksgiving time drew near and her brother announced he would run up and spend the day with her. She almost cried for joy at the news, for proud spirited Alice Page was feeling very heart hungry when the letter came. Albert was just a little surprised at her vehement welcome.

"Oh, I have been so lonesome, Bertie," she said when they were alone, "and the evenings drag by so slowly! Then you do not write me as often or such nice letters as formerly, and Aunt Susan never seems to notice that I am blue. If it were not for my school I should go crazy, I think."

"I am very busy these days, sis," Albert replied, "and my mind is all taken up with work. Mr. Nason's business is increasing, and I have many clients besides him." Then he added, "How did you like Blanch Nason?"

"Oh, she was very nice," replied Alice coolly, "and if she were a poor girl and lived here I could easily learn to love her. As it is, it is useless for me to think of her as a friend. It was good of her to pay me a visit, though, and I enjoyed every minute of it."

"And what about Frank? Did he not say a lot of sweet things to you?"

Alice colored.

"Oh, he is nice enough," she answered, "and tried to make me believe he had fallen in love with me, but it won't do any good. I am sure his managing mamma will marry him to some thin girl with a fat purse."

"So that is the way the wind blows, my sweet sister, is it? And yet my possible future law partner has been humming 'Ben Bolt' nearly every day for the past two months! You must have smiled on him very sweetly when he was here."

"Please do not say any more about him, Bert," she answered with a little pain in her voice. "He is all right, but I am too poor and too proud to satisfy his mother, so that is all there is to it."

Then she added in self protection, "Tell me about the island girl I heard you fell in love with on the yachting trip and for whom you deserted the crowd." Albert looked confused. "It is true, Bertie," she said quickly. "I can see it in your face. That explains your short letters. I shall feel more desolate now than ever."

"Alice, my sweet little sister," he replied, resolutely drawing his chair near and taking her hand, "it is true, and I intended to tell you all about it, only I hated to do it at first and so put it off. She is more than pretty, she is beautiful, and the most unaffected and tender hearted girl I ever met. But you need not worry. She is so devoted to the two old people who have brought her up as their own that she will not leave them for me as long as they live."

Then he frankly told Alice the entire story of his waif of the sea and how she had refused to yield to his pleading.

"And now, sweet sister," he said at last, "I have a plan to unfold, and I want you to consider it well. I am now earning enough to maintain a home, and I am tired of boarding house life. It is not likely I shall marry the girl I love for many years to come, and there is no need for us to be separated in this way. I think it is best that we close the house or rent it for the present, and you and Aunt Susan come to Boston. I can hire a pretty flat, and we can take down such of the furniture as we need and store the rest. What do you think of the plan?"

"Oh, I shall be so glad of the change, Bertie! It is so desolate here, and I dread the long winter. But what can I do in Boston? I cannot be idle."

"Will not housekeeping for me be occupation enough?" he answered, smiling, "or you might give music lessons and study shorthand. I need a typewriter even now."

"But what will Aunt Susan think of the change? And it will be such a change for her!"

"She will get used to it," he answered.

Then, as Alice began to realize what it meant to bid goodby to the scenes of her childhood, the old home, the great trees in front, the broad meadows, the brook that rippled through them, the little church where every one greeted her with a smile, and the grand old hills that surrounded Sandgate's peaceful valley, her heart began to sink. Then she thought of the pleasant woods where she had so often gone nutting in autumn, the old mill pond where every summer since babyhood she had gathered lilies, and even those barefooted school children of hers.

"I shall dislike to go, after all," she said at last, "but perhaps it is best. I shall be homesick for a spell, but then I shall have you." Then she rose and like a big baby crept into her brother's lap, and, tucking her sunny head under his chin, whispered: "Oh, if you were never going to be married, Bertie, I would leave it all and try to be contented. I could come up here every summer, could I not?" Then she added disconsolately: "But you will get married soon. Your beautiful island girl will not keep you waiting so long."

"No sweetheart and no wife shall ever lessen my love for you, Alice, who have been my playmate, my companion and my confidant all my life."

When they had discussed the proposed step in all its bearings for a half hour Albert said: "Come, now, sis, sing a little for me. I am hungry to hear you once more."

She complied willingly, and, as the piquant voice of Alice Page trilled the list from "Lily Dale" to "Suwanee River" and back to "Bonny Eloise" and "Patter of the Rain," Albert lazily puffed his pipe and lived over his boyhood days.

When the concert was ended he exclaimed: "I will look around before Christmas and see what kind of a flat can be found, and then when your school closes you must come down and visit me and see how you like Boston."

"Oh, that will be just delightful, only you must promise not to tell the Nasons that I am coming."

"But if they find it out Blanch and Frank would feel bitterly hurt," he replied. "Remember, they did you the honor of coming up here to visit you, and Blanch has said to me several times that she hoped you would visit her this winter."

"I should love to," replied Alice, hesitating, "but—well, I will tell you what we can do—we will wait until the day before I am to return, and then we can call there one evening. They need not know how long I have been in Boston."

When morning and departure came Albert said: "I will do as you wish, sweet sister, and unless some of the Nasons should meet us at a theater I imagine it will work all right, only it is a little rough on Frank."

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE proposed change did not seem to disturb Aunt Susan much, although Alice noticed that she was more quiet than ever and avoided that subject.

"I'm ready an' willin' to go if you think best," she said, "an' I'll do my best as long as I can. I hain't got long to stay, an' if I see you two happy I'm content."

Two weeks before Christmas came a cordial letter from Blanch reminding Alice of her promise to visit her during the holidays and insisting that she do so now. With it was inclosed an equally cordial but brief note of invitation from Mrs. Nason. Alice replied to both in due form and with profuse thanks, also stating that she had promised her brother she would visit him during her vacation, and hoped to have one or two evenings with them at that time.

Alice inclosed both notes to her brother and told him he had best inform the Nasons of her intended visit in a matter of fact way. "But," she added, "do not let on that you know they have invited me to visit them. We will do just as we talked—go there and spend one or two evenings, or perhaps I may meet them at a theater, which would be much better."

By return mail came his assurance of obedience and a sizable check. "Use it all, my dear sis," he wrote, "and for your own needs, too. I do not want you to feel ashamed of your gowns when you come to Boston."

"Bless his dear heart," said Alice when she read the letter, "what a prize that island girl will get in him!"

When Christmas came and she kissed Aunt Susan goodby, she was near giving up the trip altogether. It may have been the sad face of her aunt that brought the irresolution, or a feeling that meeting Frank would reawaken the little heartache she had for five months been trying to conquer. When she reached Boston she was met by her brother.

"I have not told Frank," Albert exclaimed, "and shall not let them know you are here until we call. I want you to myself for a few days, because after Frank knows you are here I am sure to be one too many most of the time."

"Not on his account, you'll not be," replied Alice with a snap.

What a gallant escort that brother was, and what a change from the dull monotony of her home life those days were to Alice.

They visited art galleries mornings, and devoted the afternoons and evenings to theaters; then usually a tete-a-tete supper at a cozy place where the best was to be had, and a little chat in his or her room before retiring. It was during one of these brief visits that she noticed some of the pictures that hung in his room.

"Who painted that shipwreck scene?" she asked, looking at one. "It is a gem, and those poor sailors clinging to the ice covered rigging are enough to make one shiver. And those awful waves, too, are simply terrifying. And what a pretty scene is this wild tangle of rocks with a girl leaning on one and looking out on the ocean where the sun is setting or rising," she continued as she viewed the next one. Then as she examined it a little closer she added, "Who is E. T.?" Albert made no answer, and she passed to a third one showing a little rippled cove with the ocean beyond and a girl seated in the shade of a small spruce tree.

"Why, this is by E. T. too," she exclaimed. And turning to her brother she repeated, "Who is E. T.?"

"Well," he answered, "I will take you down to the island some time and introduce you to her. She will be glad to meet my sister, you may be certain."

Then the brief history of this girl, as her brother had told it, came to her. "So that was the wreck she floated ashore from, was it, Bert? And can she paint like that? Why, I am astonished! And who is the girl leaning on the rock? What an exquisitely molded figure and what a pretty pose! Who is she?"

"That is your possible sister-in-law," answered Albert, with a touch of pride, "and the pictures were done by her from sketches I first made myself. They are true to life so far as all details go, only I failed to catch her expressive face in the one that shows a front view of her."

"So that was the way you wooed your island goddess, was it?" observed Alice, with a roguish look. "Made her

THE SEVEN WHISTLERS.

An Ancient Superstition That Still Exists in England.

In some parts of England peculiar whistling or yelping noises are heard in the air after dusk and early in the morning before daylight during the winter months. Sometimes, however, the noise is described as beautiful sounds like music, high up in the air, which gradually die away. The general belief is that the "seven whistlers," as they are called, are the foretellers of bad luck, disaster or death to some one in the locality. It is a very ancient suggestion. Both swifts and plovers have been suggested as the "whistlers." It may be noted that plovers are traditionally supposed to contain the souls of those who assisted at the crucifixion and in consequence were doomed to float in the air forever. Really, the "whistlers" are widgeon, or teal, as they flit from their feeding grounds, a passage always made under cover of darkness. In Shropshire the sound is described as resembling that of many larks singing, and the folklore of both Shropshire and Worcestershire says, "They are seven birds, and the six fly about continually together looking for the seventh, and when they find him the world will come to an end."

Everywhere, without exception, the "seven whistlers" are believed to presage ill, but the superstition seems to be more particularly a miners' notion. If they hear the warning voice of the "seven whistlers," birds sent, as they say, by Providence to warn them of an impending danger, not a man will descend into the pit until the following day. For example, in September, 1874, the following paragraph went the round of the papers: "On Monday morning large numbers of the miners employed at the Bedworth collieries, in North Warwickshire, giving way to a superstition which has long prevailed among their class, refused to descend into the pits in which they are employed. During Sunday night it was stated that the 'seven whistlers' had been distinctly heard in the neighborhood of Bedworth, and the result was that on the following morning many of the men positively refused to descend into the pits."

Morfa colliery, in South Wales, is notorious for its uncanny traditions. The "seven whistlers" were heard there before a great explosion in the sixties and before another in 1890, when nearly a hundred miners were entombed. In December, 1895, it was said that they had been heard yet again, whereupon the men struck work and could not be induced to resume it until the government inspector had made a close examination of the workings and reported all safe. In July, 1902, another instance of a colliery strike, founded upon the same superstition, occurred in England.

Cement.

The difference between the two well known varieties of cement, the Rosendale and the Portland, lies in the fact that the first named is a natural product and the latter an artificial. The former is made by burning a shaly limestone in kilns and grinding the clinker produced with bur stones to a very fine powder, which, when mixed with water, soon sets and forms an artificial stone nearly as hard as the original rock. Portland cement, on the other hand, is made by combining chalk or some other form of limestone free from magnesia with siliceous clay, these materials being intimately mixed and made into bricks, which are burned in kilns with coke fuels at a very intense heat. The resulting clinker is ground in the same manner as natural cement and is much stronger and sets quicker than the other.

Fishing For Sea Fowl.

Catching gulls and other sea fowl by a baited hook and line is a barbarous practice which is sometimes resorted to by sailors. The same method was employed in former times for catching herons. A long line of silk, with a strand of wire twisted in, was fixed to a stone at one end and to hooks at the other. The bait was then put out in shallow water, where the birds seek their food, either in a stream or at the edge of a pond. When the heron pouched the bait the hooks lodged in his gullet, and the strand of wire in the line prevented it from being bitten through.

Unpardonable.

"In what family were you last employed?" asked Mrs. Fields-James.

"In the family of Mrs. Boscommon," replied the applicant for a position of governess.

"May I ask why you left her?"

"Her superficiality and lack of general information rendered my position unendurable. She was unaware of the distinction between an anachronism and an anomaly."

The Mule's Placid State.

"Is that your mule?" asked the man who was going fishing.

"Yas, sir," said the colored man who was sitting on a log by the road.

"Does he kick?"

"'Deed, mistuh, he ain't got no cause to kick. He's gittin' his own way right along. I'm de one dat's havin' de worry an' difficulty."—Exchange.

All She Wanted.

"She's a lovely girl and so simple in her tastes. I told her that I hadn't much of an income yet, but that I hoped I could provide for her every want."

"And what did she say?"

"She said that would be all she could ask."

The invitation to be happy is extended to us all, but that we may be happy we must be kind.—Schoolmaster.

SEVEN SUTHERLAND SISTERS HAIR GROWER

The Great Hair Tonic is a Positive and Thorough Antiseptic

and will quickly eradicate all traces of scalp bacteria, which is the cause of hair falling, dandruff and baldness. NO SCALP CAN BE HEALTHY AND NO HAIR CAN BE BEAUTIFUL WHEN CONTAMINATED WITH THESE DISEASE-BREEDING CREATURES. They undermine the hair and devour all the nutriment or life-sap of the scalp, without which the scalp dries up and peels off, forming dandruff and causing the loss of hair. SEVEN SUTHERLAND SISTERS HAIR GROWER AND SCALP CLEANER ARE THE ONLY REMEDIES IN THE WORLD THAT WILL DESTROY THESE GERMS. They penetrate the scalp thoroughly, carrying with them all the necessary properties to quickly rejuvenate all the impoverished parts. They rebuild the lost tissues of the scalp and renew the growth of the hair in every case. A few applications will make the hair fairly sparkle with new life and vigor. They make healthy hair grow twice to three times as fast as it does normally. We here show the mic[illegible] that causes Dandruff, Itching, Hair Falling and Baldness.

THE KITCHEN.

Schemes by Which It May Be Made a Place of Beauty.

The keynote of decoration for a pretty kitchen is often found in the colors of its uniform collection of pots and pans.

These may be hung from under a high shelf placed over the chimney piece at the back of the range, the chimney being painted to imitate bricks outlined in white.

In a kitchen in which the walls are a light fresh green the chimney piece is painted a strong red and hung with copper saucepans and kettles and frying pans.

In another the walls are painted yellow, and the chimney piece is done in white enamel with outlines of blue put on in four inch squares. Two or three shelves over this space hold blue and white jars and bakers and spice holders. Kettles and pans of blue enamel ware with white interiors swing from the wide lower shelf, all within easy reach, and blue and white cotton is used both for curtains and table cover.

Fresh and light is a brown and white kitchen, with walls, woodwork and shelves painted in white, and in which brown and white agate ware plays the double role of ornamentation and utility. Brown and white linoleum is on the floor, and the gayest of gay chintz curtains are at the windows, with the ruffled cover in the seat of the rocking chair to match. A set of Dutch shelves is covered with heavy but highly colored old fashioned plates and cups which are in constant use as well as being prettily effective as part of the color scheme.

A DRY SHAMPOO.

How to Clean the Hair Without Danger of Catching Cold.

"I've got to shampoo my hair, and, oh, how I dread the cold that is certain to follow!" sighed the delicate girl.

"Do you dry it carefully?"

"Always, but it makes no difference. I never wash my hair without suffering from cold and neuralgia."

"Well, then, why don't you try a dry shampoo?"

"No water?"

"Not a drop. Have several clean brushes, an old silk handkerchief and some good bay rum. Part the hair through the middle and again across behind the ears. Brush gently in long even strokes, but firmly enough to reach the scalp and remove all dust and dandruff; then separate the hair in small strands, shaking each well to dislodge any remaining particles of dust. Brush again, using another clean brush, and finish by wiping each strand with a clean, soft handkerchief. You will be delighted to see how bright the hair is. Apply bay rum to the scalp with a small sponge and rub it in well with the finger tips. Bay rum is a valuable tonic as well as an aid in keeping the hair soft and dry. A better preparation even than bay rum is the prepared rum and quinine which any druggist can put up for you."

"It sounds awfully comfortable," said the delicate girl. "I'll give it a trial anyhow."

THE NURSERY.

To cleanse the baby's rubber blanket use a flannel cloth dipped in kerosene.

Half a dress shield fastened on the underside of baby's bib prevents the moisture from wetting his dress and underclothing.

"If children could be sent to a chewing school as they are sent to a kindergarten," says a common sense physician, "there would be a marked improvement in the race."

Oil stoves should be banished from the nursery. They foul the air to such an extent as to render them unfit for use in any room not provided with a free current from open door to open window or ventilator.

Don't allow a child to be exposed to the infection of measles, scarlatina, etc., under the impression that these are "childish ailments," which they must have. There is no disease that any child "must have."

Lunch For Children.

Because things to eat do not always present an attractive appearance their nourishing quality is not properly appreciated.

The value of dates for children's school luncheons is not fully appreciated. They are rather sticky, bothersome things as they are originally purchased, and children rarely care for them. They should be separated and washed, the stone removed and a peanut or almond, salted preferably, substituted. The date is then rolled in cornstarch or powdered sugar and straightway becomes one of the appetizing trifles dear to youth and at the same time is healthful and nourishing.

Chocolate Macaroons.

Chocolate macaroons, notwithstanding their aristocratic appellation, have as their foundation stale bread. This is dried in the oven and grated. One-quarter its bulk in shredded coconut and pulverized chocolate is used, the whole being delicately flavored with a few drops of vanilla. The beaten whites of eggs are next stirred in in the proportion of five to a breakfast cup of the macaroon compound. When thoroughly mixed this should be of a consistency to drop lightly from a spoon upon well buttered paper and baked in a quick oven.

Ink Stains on Linen.

Deep black ink stains can be removed from white linen goods by soaking the parts stained overnight in half a pint of cold water and salts of lemon (poisonous). Next morning bleach with good soap and rinse in water. Not a spot will be visible.

IT IS THE CAT.

Pussy Fashion's Fad and the Household Pet—How to Treat Her.

"Whene'er I take my walks abroad, how many cats I see!" Everywhere, in town or country, pussy may be found in dozens and hundreds, lying on tops of walls in the sunshine, lazily watching the birds on the lawn, or sitting at the top of the area steps, waiting for the meat man.

Why does every one think that cats live on milk? The idea is widespread, and yet many cats don't like it and will not touch it. Then people wonder what makes the cat so fond of drinking from a pan put under a tap to catch the drip of water while its saucer of milk is standing untasted under the table. In reality puss is rather a thirsty animal for water, and cats, though they can have as much milk as they want, constantly come up to drink from the dog's trough of cool water.

So please let poor puss have a water trough all to herself if there are no kind dogs for her to share it with.

It is very bad for cats to be out all night. Many people turn out their cats at night regularly, and then they wonder that puss looks so thin and wretched and has such a rough coat. Besides this cats left to wander about at night will go incredible distances and sometimes into places where there are infectious diseases, which they bring home. Cats are very subject to sore throat and diphtheria, and their friends at home may easily catch these from them.

Cats should have plenty of fish and meat and bones to knaw. They are carnivorous animals and cannot keep well and strong on bread and milk. The bones will help to keep their teeth clean, and the diet for which nature has formed them will make their coats smooth and glossy.

The distances cats go in search of grass are very great, and the relish with which the town bred puss falls upon a bunch of the coarse herbage known as dog grass if it be brought home for her and tied to the leg of a table so that she can crop and pull at it is very marked. Grass is the cat's natural medicine, cooling and alterative, and should be provided as constantly as possible.

Some folks starve the cat under the impression that doing so makes it more eager to catch mice. This is a cruel fallacy. If the cat is a good mouser it catches mice principally for the ingrained instinct and love of sport and not as a food. It plays with them for a long time and then, having killed them, leaves them uneaten in some corner. Many of course do eat them, but only probably as a tidbit.

Need it be said how cruel and horribly wrong it is to leave a poor cat to fend for itself in the summer holidays when the house is shut up?—Lady.

A Clear Complexion.

To keep the skin in a perfectly healthy condition a daily tepid water bath is necessary. It is a good plan to dampen the entire body with a sponge and dry briskly with a rough towel every night just before retiring. This has a soothing influence and induces a sound, invigorating and restful sleep, from which one wakes refreshed. Those desirous of obtaining a fine, healthy looking skin and clear complexion should get all the fresh, pure air and sunshine possible, should sleep eight hours daily, should not eat much meat, pastry or sweets, but drink plenty of water between meals, eat fruit, vegetables and salads. Tomatoes, leeks, carrots and spinach are also good. Green vegetables are one of the best purifiers, and there should be no stint in the use of them, advises the Ladies' World. An old English rhyme says:

With spinach and leek,
Lily cheeks in a week.

A Household Remedy.

Papa had suffered all day with the toothache and had his hand to the side of his face. His little son, about five, looked at him sympathetically and said: "Papa, I can cure you if you will do what I tell you to. Fill your mouth full of water and go sit on the stove till it boils."—Exchange.

A Fine Salad.

Cook the roe of a shad with half an onion and a bit of bay leaf in salted, acidulated water twenty minutes. Let the water bubble but gently on one side of the saucepan lest the membrane surrounding the eggs be broken during cooking. Let cool in the water, drain and when cold cut in slices. Cut the broken slices in cubes, marinate with two or three tablespoonfuls of oil, a dash of cayenne, one-fourth a teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. When ready to serve add a chilled cucumber pared and cut in cubes and mayonnaise or boiled dressing to moisten the whole. Rub the salad dish with the cut side of a clove of garlic, dispose the salad in a rectangular shape upon the center of the dish, put about the edge of the salad heart leaves of lettuce dressed with French dressing, inside the long sides of this border slices of dressed cucumber, one overlapping another, and on the top of the salad the whole slices of roe, one overlapping another. Garnish the roe with chillies.—Boston Cooking School Magazine.

CONDENSED MILK.

Its Discovery Was Brought About by a Woman's Experiments.

"How and when was condensed milk discovered?" said a milk dealer. "Well, that is an easy question, known to all venders of the article.

"It chanced that in 1854 the journey from New Orleans to New York was a considerable trip. A certain lady—Mrs. Albert Cashingor—had a sick baby, and on account of that condensed milk was discovered.

"Mrs. Cashingor's baby was so ill that she realized that it would be necessary to make a trip to New York to receive expert medical attention if she hoped to save the child's life. But to travel that long distance the child had to have milk. Milk wouldn't keep fresh more than a few hours. So there she was, kept back from making the trip merely because she could not supply the child with fresh milk.

"In her despair she began to experiment to see if she could not preserve milk the same as she did jelly or anything else. She tried several different methods and finally hit upon a plan which seemed to give satisfaction. So she preserved several big jars of the stuff, put it upon a sailing vessel and made the trip. The child fed upon the milk and was nourished.

"In New York several men learned of her discovery. They tried to make some of the condensed milk in the manner that she had told them, but failed. They followed her to New Orleans, and there she unwittingly unfolded her valuable secret. On the island of Galveston these men started a small factory, and there the first salable condensed milk was made.

"The woman died poor. The manufacturers made a fortune. Now condensed milk is sold in every part of the world."

CHAMPAGNE MAKING.

The Methods That Are Used in Producing the Wine.

It is to the invention of the champagne cork that the world owes champagne, according to Court Purveyor J. Fromm of Frankfort, Germany.

This wine is said to have been made successfully by the butler of a monastery near L inay, in France, in 1643. Until the early part of the nineteenth century sparkling wines were made only in the French province of Champagne.

Next to the wine, carbonic acid forms the most important part of champagne. The picking of the grapes used requires great care to prevent discoloration. The grapes should not contain too much acid and coloring matter, but considerable sugar.

In order that the grapes should not become warm, thereby fermenting prematurely, picking is done in the early morning hours. The grapes are then placed in the press at once and the juice squeezed out very gently. After twelve to twenty-four hours it is run into vats, where its impurities are removed. After the first violent fermentation is over the young wine is put in cool cellars, into barrels of from 125 to 150 gallons. Toward the end of December the young wine is drawn off in order to separate it completely from the yeast.

The wine is then mixed with wines of other years and kinds. It is then bottled and the progress of fermentation carefully watched, the bottles being opened to "disgorge" the albumen, yeast and other products of fermentation which it is necessary to get rid of. It is then sweetened and stored in cellars to mature for the market.

One Kind of Soft Answer.

It lacked but five minutes of the time for the train to start from the downtown station, and the suburbanites were hurrying into it when a man in the garb of a mechanic sat down by the side of a finely dressed passenger in one of the seats in the rear car, took a paper from his pocket and began to read.

"Plenty of empty seats in here yet, aren't there?" growled the man in fine raiment, moving along grudgingly.

"Yes, sir," pleasantly replied the newcomer, "but it will be crowded pretty soon, and I thought I'd pick out a gentleman for a seat mate while I had a chance."

"Humph!" grunted the other man, uncertain whether to feel complimented or insulted, but realizing the hopelessness of trying to make any fitting rejoinder.—Youth's Companion.

A Matter of Business.

The ladies of the club were closely grouped about the speaker of the afternoon, a remarkably successful woman, in whom commercial and literary ability were admirably balanced.

"Tell us in a few words how to be successful," said one of the ladies insistently.

"To be successful," said the successful one, "all we women have to do is to make as much of a business of our own business as we do of the things that are none of our business."

Comforting.

"George, dear," she said, with a blush, "do you know that Mr. Simpson asked me last night to be his wife?"

"Well, I like his impudence! The idea of proposing to an engaged young lady! What did you say to him?"

"I told him that I was very sorry indeed, but he was too late."

A Leading Question.

Parent—Has that man asked you to marry him, Julia? Daughter—Not in so many words, but it has amounted to that. Last night he asked me if my dad was as well off as they say he is.

Learn how to listen and you will profit even from those who talk badly. —Plutarch.

Flues Easily Cleaned

Cleaning out the flues of most furnaces is so difficult and complicated that only an expert can do it, and experts' services usually come high

The flues in the Sunshine Furnace can be cleaned from two different clean-out doors and from the feed-door, so that there is no part of the flues which is not easily reached.

A special brush for this purpose is always supplied, and the operation is so simple that a boy can perform it.

The whole Sunshine Furnace construction is on the same plan of simplicity.

MISS IRWIN.

THERE'S NO SENSE IN GETTING DROWNED.

SO SAYS CAPT. TOM RILEY, A VETERAN LIFE SAVER.

Now that the swimming season is fairly under way, said Capt. Tom Riley, the veteran Coney Island life saver, it may not be a bad idea to give a few pointers to the average bather that may come useful to him some time or other.

The first piece of advice I would give is: Don't go far from shore. Swimming is one of the hardest exercises in the world, and a man must be well used to it. No matter whether he is as fit as a fiddle to run a five-mile race in record time, let him be careful how far he tries to swim.

Every muscle is used when a man is swimming, many of them that are never brought into play in any other way. This is the main reason why so many fellows get into trouble every year.

They feel good and strong, and when they get into the water they swim and swim until they get tired. Then when they try to swim back again their strength plays out, and if help isn't near by they get rattled. The next day the newspapers have another account of "An Expert Swimmer Drowned."

Getting rattled is another thing to guard against. Nine times out of ten this has more to do with people getting into trouble than anything else. Whatever you do, keep cool, keep your nerve. A man can stay afloat a long time if he won't get rattled, no matter what's the trouble with him.

There's a spot just off Norton's Point where you can't make headway in one direction or the other. If you are caught in there with a boat you can't pull out, so you can have an idea of what kind of work a swimmer has cut out for him. There is only one thing to do, and that is to keep cool and quiet, and after a while the current will carry you out, but you can't get out swimming. That is what we call a "sea puss."

In a race I once had some years ago from the Battery to Coney Island I got caught in this place. I knew it the minute I reached it, so I didn't try to swim, but turned over on my back and floated.

In the course of a few minutes I was whirled out and went on and won my race. Now, an inexperienced swimmer would have got rattled, made big efforts to get out, and finally have tired himself out and sunk.

Don't be afraid of cramps is another thing that all swimmers should remember. There has been so much said and written about cramps that people are scared to death when they feel a little cramp coming on in a toe or hand. Then they lose their nerve altogether and give up, where by being cool they could have made their way to shore in safety.

Lots of the pleasure of bathers is taken away by this fear. I won't say that cramps are not slightly dangerous, but they are never so bad that a swimmer can't take care of himself. Swimmers with any kind of ability ought to be able to swim any reasonable distance with any kind of a cramp. The ones who are not good swimmers should always hug the shore and never take chances.

Cramps are brought on by swimming. So when you feel one coming on stop using the leg or arm where it is located. If you turn over on your back and float a while that will give the cramp a chance to go away, but even if he doesn't it won't prevent you from swimming slowly and getting to shore.

Most people think a cramp spreads gradually until it goes all over the body from a little cramp in the toe. That isn't so. It is always confined to the leg or arm, where it starts. This is proved by the fact that it goes away when you quit using the leg or arm.

Whenever you hear cramp stories some one is sure to mention stomach cramps. They are supposed to be the most dangerous kind. You hear where people are doubled up like a jackknife, and then sink like a stone. Now, as a matter of fact, in all my experience I never had a stomach cramp or saw a person with one.

If they ever happen they have kept out of my sight. And I don't believe there is such a thing. This is another fairy story that has been told until everybody believes it. So that when a fellow in swimming gets a little pain in the stomach he at once imagines he has stomach cramps, and that he's a goner, and will at once yell for help or do something foolish.

It's nearly always the poor swimmer who gets in trouble, for he is the one to take the greatest chances. Good swimmers always travel in pairs so they can aid one another in case of trouble. You often see the head of one of these poor swimmers bobbing about way off shore, although we try our best to keep them in, and when one of them gets into trouble he is usually so far out that he is gone before we can get at him.

Burglary at the Depot Last Night.

TICKET OFFICE BROKEN OPEN, BUT THIEVES GOT LITTLE FOR THEIR PAINS.

About 11.45 o'clock last night some parties broke into the ticket office of the local station, and ransacked the place. A street report said that a quantity of tickets had been taken, and that it would be impossible to estimate the loss until an inventory was taken. The burglary, it was also said, was committed by three men who came on wheels and rode away again before the burglary was discovered.

The Intelligencer this morning asked Mr. Coppin, Station Agent, for some information in connection with the affair, and that gentleman said the door had been broken open and about 50 cents worth of coppers taken from the till. All the other money, he said, was safely locked up. Asked as to whether any tickets had been taken, Mr. Coppin made reply that the tickets were locked up until 12 o'clock, when the office was opened by the ticket seller.

"Have you any idea who the burglars were?" he was asked.

"I wish I had," was the laconic reply.

AQUATICS.

Large Crowd Watched the Sailing Races Yesterday.

The sailing races yesterday were watched by a large crowd, and the spectators, perhaps, got more fun out of them than did the sailor men themselves. The wind was high, and many of the craft had great difficulty in weathering the gale; but, although one capsized, fortunately no casualties resulted.

Three events took place, two of which were well contested. Summary:

Yacht race, first raters — There were three entries, namely, the Yoda, Iola and Psyche. The latter had not sailed far when she sprung a board, causing a leak. The craft was turned towards the harbor and beached near her moorings. The Yoda won from the Iola with a margin of 1 min. 17 sec. The Iola missed the first buoy, which caused her much delay.

Yachts, half-raters—There were three entries, namely, the Angeline, Clementine and Pando. The latter capsized in the harbor whilst making for the starting point. She sailed only over the last round. This was a pretty race and an exceedingly close finish, the Angeline winning by 7 sec.

Skiff race—There was but one entry, namely, the Larue skiff, which went over the course in order to claim a win for the cup.

Owing to the high wind the punts did not venture out.

The officials were as follows:

Starter—"King" Rogers.

Judges—R. S. Bell, H. Hulme and W. H. Campbell.

Timekeeper— Ald. McFee.

At the Twelfth of July celebration in Kingston, which was highly successful in every way, the following resolution was moved by Mr. William Galbraith, of Montreal, and carried amid tremendous enthusiasm:

"That we as a body of Orangemen assembled to celebrate the 12th of July, having learned with regret that Lord Dundonald is about to leave the Dominion of Canada, he having severed his connection with the militia of Canada and ceased to be the grand officer in command of the said militia, and, we firmly believe that the head of the Militia Department should be non-political in every way, and that the appointment of all officers to serve in the militia of this country should be conducted with the view of securing the very best men available to serve in our militia irrespective of what their political leanings may be, and again we firmly believe that if Lord Dundonald had been allowed to have a free hand, considering his military record and ability, the militia of this country would soon have the reputation of being a well-drilled fighting force, as he would have no trouble in this country, in picking the best recruits to be found anywhere in the civilized world."

SAD TRAGEDY IN CITY LAST NIGHT.

Miss Kathleen Hamilton, a Bright and Popular Young Lady, Found Dead.

Deep Sympathy Expressed by All Classes of Citizens at the Terrible Affair.

On every hand, this morning, one heard nothing but expressions of sympathy for Mr. W. H. Hamilton, Manager of the Merchants' Bank, and his family, the cause being the demise last night of his second daughter, Miss Kathleen. The angel of death, in one brief second, swooped down and changed a happy household into a house of mourning.

The particulars of the awful affair, and the incidents which led up to it, are as follows:

For some two years and a half Miss Hamilton had been engaged as a nurse in the Roosevelt Hospital, New York. About five weeks ago she came home, suffering with a nervous complaint, for which she was treated by Dr. Yeomans. The young lady, it appears, was very fond of her associations in the Roosevelt Hospital, and cherished hopes of returning to her position before long.

Yesterday afternoon Miss Kathleen, in company with other young people, had been down to Massassaga Park, and appeared as light-hearted and merry as any in the party. She returned home about 8 o'clock, and awaiting her was a letter from the authorities of the Roosevelt Hospital, stating, in effect, that, owing to the state of her health, it was considered by them advisable that Miss Hamilton should resign and sever her connection with the Hospital.

The unfortunate young lady read the letter, and, throwing her arms round her mother's neck, burst into tears. The members of the family present comforted her to the best of their power, and she apparently recovered her poise. Shortly afterwards the young lady left the room and went upstairs. Soon after the report of a revolver was heard downstairs, and Mr. Hamilton, sr., ran into the bank proper, where Mr. Dean, a clerk, was engaged with some clerical work. The latter was asked if he had fired any shot, but replied in the negative. By the time Mr. Hamilton returned to his home the body of the dead girl had been discovered by her sister. She was lying in her brother's room, with a bullet through her temples. A 38-calibre revolver, which had been under the pillow of her father, was found by her side.

The doctors were called in, but they could, of course, do nothing.

The family, naturally, are terribly upset by the awful occurrence, and the sympathy of everybody goes out to them in their hour of affliction.

The funeral, which will be private, will take place to-morrow afternoon.

Paul Kruger is Dead.

PNEUMONIA THE CAUSE— WILL BE BURIED IN SOUTH AFRICA.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

London, July 14.—Paul Kruger, ex-President of the late Transvaal Republic, died this morning at Clarens, Switzerland, of pneumonia.

He will be bured in South Africa.

Died in Madoc.

Mr. Samuel Rollins, of Madoc village, died this morning, aged 78 years. Deceased had been a resident of that place for many years and was not only well-known, but highly esteemed. He had been ill for three months. Mr. Rollins had been for years a member of the Presbyterian Church. A widow and large family survive. Mr. Robert Rollins, cheese buyer of this city, is a son of the deceased.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Fell Off Yacht Norah; Dead When Rescued.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A YOUNG PORT HOPE GENTLEMAN THIS AFTERNOON.

The Pale Horse and its rider, it would appear, are abroad in Belleville at present. Scarcely had our citizens recovered from the shock of last night's tragedy than it became noised about this afternoon that a young man had been drowned in the harbor.

Upon investigation it was found that the story was only too true.

The particulars of the sad affair, are these: Mr. Talbott Metcalfe, a well-known and popular young gentleman belonging to Port Hope, was busy on the yacht Norah, which craft was being prepared for a cruise. It seems that he fell off the bow of the yacht into the water.

Mr. Sydney ("Laddie") Stork and Mr. C. W. Turner were at hand and promptly went to the unfortunate man's assistance.

Mr. Stork, like the gallant lad he is, immediately dove and, with Mr. Turner's assistance, recovered the body.

Four city physicians at once went to the scene of the accident, and did all in their power to restore life, but unsuccessfully.

It is believed by those who saw the accident, considering the way he fell, and the short time he was in the water before he was rescued that Mr. Metcalf's death was caused by heart failure.

The victim of the accident was about 30 years of age.

CHARTER TO BE CANCELLED.

Attorney-General Upheld Against Toronto Junction Recreation Club.

Toronto, July 14.—As soon as an Order-in-Council can be prepared and passed, the Toronto Junction Recreation Club's charter will be revoked by the Attorney-General as a result of the decision of Justice Anglin yesterday in refusing to grant the application of the club to restrain the Attorney-General from such cancellation.

A sufficient time to wind up the affairs of the club, pay accounts and so forth will be permitted on an undertaking being given that no poolroom or other illegal business will be transacted in the meantime, otherwise the cancellation will be given immediate effect.

Cloudburst Near Manila Causes Loss of 200 Lives.

Manila, July 14.—A cloudburst over the hills northeast of Manila caused a flood, which has destroyed San Juan Delmonte. Two hundred lives were lost. The low-lying districts were inundated. The homes of Americans and foreigners are isolated. Transportation through the streets is carried on in boats only.

Rain has fallen for twenty-seven hours, totalling 17 1-5 inches. This is unprecedented. Communication with outside places is interrupted. The damage to property is estimated at $2,000,000.

JAPS LOSE ON JULY 12

Repulsed With Great Loss in Battle North of Kaichou.

Yinkow Correspondent of the London Chronicle Is Authority For News—Loss of 30,000 Japs Improbable, Though Russians Circulate the Report—Has Port Arthur Fallen?—Russians Lost 200 in Bloody Affair at Motien Pass.

London, July 14.—The Yinkow correspondent of The Daily Chronicle asserts that a battle occurred north of Kaichou July 12, when the Japanese were repulsed with great loss.

Closing in on Kuropatkin.

St. Petersburg, July 13.—Steadily and cautiously Gen. Oku's army from the south and Gen. Nodzu's army from the east are closing in upon Tatchekiao, where Gen. Kuropatkin is reported to be entrenching. One hundred and thirty thousand men are involved in the movement. The next few days will determine whether and to what extent Gen. Kuropatkin intends to make a stand at Tatchekiao, the possession of which by the Japanese would compel the immediate evacuation of Newchwang.

The outposts of the armies are scarcely 15 miles apart.

Literally Mowed Down.

Tatchekiao, July 13.—A Russian correspondent of the Associated Press in the field, describing the fight which preceded the capture of Kaichou, says that the Japanese did not display their customary prudence. They advanced in open formation with cries of "banzai," meeting the hail of artillery and rifle fire of Major-General Kandratovitch's men and being literally mowed down.

With 50,000 Japs.

Chefoo, July 13.—A despatch received here from Lloyd's agent at Newchwang says: "Japanese scouts were seen this morning at Blackwood's Pond, six miles south of here. Gen. Oku with 50,000 men is advancing rapidly between this place and Tatchekiao."

Loss of 30,000 Japs Improbable.

St. Petersburg, July 13.—An official communication from the Russian general staff says:

"According to information derived from Japanese sources and received by Admiral Alexieff's military staff, the Japanese attacked the Russian positions at Port Arthur during the night of July 10. They were repulsed with enormous loss. It is difficult to calculate even approximately the number of Japanese casualties, which amounted, it is said, to the immense figure of 30,000."

Not Fathered By Alexieff.

There was great anxiety thruout St. Petersburg all this evening for further details of the reported disaster. It has developed that the official report, which was at first supposed to emanate directly from Viceroy Alexieff, was not specifically fathered by him, but was given out as a report, reaching his headquarters from "Japanese sources." What these sources are has not yet been explained.

Has Port Arthur Fallen?

London, July 14.—There is published this morning a rumor that Port Arthur has fallen, but it is discredited and lacks confirmation of any sort.

Bloody Affair at Motien Pass.

At the Front With Gen. Kuroki's Forces, July 4, via Seoul, Korea, July 13.—The brief and disastrous attempts of the Russians to overwhelm the small Japanese force which guarded the entrance to the Motien Pass was a bloody affair. The Japanese troops again exhibited their resourcefulness and courage, and the Russians again threw away many lives. The losses cannot be ascertained until the battlefield has been searched. The Japanese are still driving the enemy up the valley. The correspondent of the Associated Press saw enough to justify the estimate that the Russians had more than two hundred men killed or wounded, and that the Japanese casualties probably will amount to sixty.

20 KILLED.

Twenty-Five Injured in a Railway Collision Near Chicago.

Chicago, July 14.—Twenty persons were killed and about twenty-five injured in a collision on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad at Glenwood, Ill., 23 miles south of Chicago.

The collision occurred between a picnic train from Chicago, which was returning from Momence, Ill., and a freight train, into the rear end of which the excursion train dashed at high speed. A misplaced switch threw the picnic train over on the southbound track, and before the engineer could apply the brakes it ran at 40 miles an hour into the rear of the freight.

The picnic was the annual outing of the members of Doremus Church.

Drowned in Hamilton.

Hamilton, July 14.—Walter Petitt, a 17-year-old son of J. W. Petitt, carpenter, was drowned while bathing with a party of other boys at the foot of Victoria avenue, last evening. He got beyond his depth, and could not swim.

Drowned at Penetang.

Penetanguishene, July 14.—Richard McNamara, aged 16, son of Dennis McNamara of this town, was drowned yesterday morning. He fell off the slabs at the Firstbrook Box Company's factory. He was alone at the time, and the men who were working a short distance off failed to reach him in time to rescue him. His body was found in about an hour.

Brakeman Killed.

Huntsville, July 14.—A brakeman on the Grand Trunk Railway from Allandale, named Thomas Beatty, was run over at South River and had one leg cut off and the other badly mangled. He was brought to the general hospital here by special train Tuesday night, but died about 2 o'clock yesterday morning.

Killed By Lightning.

Quebec, July 11.—Mrs. Arthur Beaudoin, 30 years of age, and the mother of six children, was struck and killed by lightning at her home in St. Henry Lewis, during Tuesday night's big lightning and thunderstorm about 6 o'clock.

THE BISLEY MEET.

Names of Canadian Team Chosen to Compete For MacKinnon Cup.

Bisley Camp, July 14.—To-day the MacKinnon Challenge Cup competition for the service rifle takes place at 800, 900 and 1,000 yards, ten shots at each distance. Teams from Canada, England, Scotland, Wales, Natal and New Zealand have entered the competition.

To Represent Canada.

The following men have been chosen to represent Canada in the MacKinnon Challenge Cup competition: Capt. H. C. Blair, 78th, Truro; Capt. J. Crowe, 30th, Guelph; Staff-Sergt. C. R. Crowe, 30th, Guelph; Capt. R. Dillon, 34th, Whitby; Corp. R. McGregor, G.G.F.G., Ottawa; Major W. P. Moore, 20th, Georgetown; Sergt. G. Mortimer, 10th, Toronto; Pte. C. S. Scott, 43rd, Ottawa; Pte. Neil Smith, 21st, Stewart; Pte. H. Tyers, Toronto; Pte. T. Westman, 43rd, Ottawa; Col.-Sergt. W. H. Youhill, 90th, Winnipeg.

In the sweepstakes competition at 600 yards, the second prize of £3 was taken by Sergt. G. Mortimer of the 10th Royal Grenadiers, and the third prize of £2 by Private Neil Smith of the Essex Fusiliers.

Canadians did badly in the Keystone Burgundy match, 10 shots at 1,000 yards, and those who shot yesterday will not likely get into the prize list. The wind was tricky and marksmen had trouble in finding the target.

75,000 BUTCHERS ON STRIKE.

$100,000,000 Tied Up in Chicago—Strike May Benefit Canada.

Chicago, July 14.—The meat cutters strike spread yesterday by the action of the teamsters who refused to handle meat touched by non-union workmen. 150 commission houses are out of buiness, and prices to the consumer promise to reach the prohibitive point. Business interests aggregating $100,000,000 are tied up here.

Meat Famine Now.

New York, July 14.—New York today faces a meat famine as serious and likely to be even more costly than the coal famine of two years ago. By midnight last night almost 75,000 meat packers throughout the country had gone out on strike. The three thousand union meat cutters connected with the union went out yesterday. Prime beef is five cents a pound higher than it was two days ago.

Expect Higher Prices.

Hamilton, July 14.—From present indications there will be a boost in packed and cured meat prices in the city in a very few days, following on the big American strike movement. Speaking of the matter, yesterday morning, a Hamilton packing house official said there would be a local boost in less than a week if the strike was not ended.

Doukhobors on the March.

Winnipeg, July 14.—The Doukhobors in the neighborhood of Swan River to the number of 200 men, women and children, have started on a second march, crazed with religious zeal, singing and shouting as they wander in irregular line over the prairies. They are practically naked, and the women and the children, destitute of food for several days, are on the verge of starvation. A squad of provincial police have been despatched by the Government with orders to arrest the three leaders of the pilgrims.

Fell From Third Story.

Toronto, July 14.—Yesterday Jas. Furlong, while cleaning windows, fell three stories from a window in 36 East King street, and had a leg broken and was injured internally. Doctors are doubtful of his recovery.

CALLED AN ISHMAELITE

Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick's Measure of the Auditor-General.

Minister of Justice Succeeds in Voting Down Amendment to the Audit Act—Davis Contract Debated, But Little Progress Was Made—Minister of Justice Denies That There Was Anything Corrupt in the Matter.

Ottawa, July 14.—A resolution moved by R. L. Borden, declaring in favor of an amendment to the audit act, was voted down in the House last night on a vote of 94 to 56. Some strong arguments were advanced to show the necessity of strengthening the Auditor-General's hands and of retaining the services of J. Lorne McDougall. Hon. W. S. Fielding and Hon. Chas. A. Fitzpatrick, who spoke in behalf of the Government, argued the sufficiency of the act, and justified the treatment of Auditor-General McDougall all along the line. Mr. Fitzpatrick declared that Mr. McDougall was an Ishmaelite, whose hand was raised against all men. He promised at a later stage to show that the Auditor-General had made serious misstatements in connection with his presentation of the Davis contract.

The Davis Contract.

Two hours of somewhat slow fighting over the Davis contract last night did little more than reveal the Government's resources of defence. The real battle will be fought out when the papers bearing on the contract are printed and submitted to the House. These papers, Mr. Fitzpatrick states, are too voluminous to be printed in their entirety.

At his suggestion Mr. Borden named three members of the Opposition—Messrs. Haggart, Barker and Lennox—to examine the papers, and select those which are pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. Fitzpatrick also defended the Government, holding justified the Davis contract, which, he declared, was practically the same as the contract made with Mr. Davis by the Conservative Government before the election of 1896.

R. L. Borden briefly discussed the contract. He argued that the contract of 1896 was practically an option, which gave the Government the right to take electric power at $33 a horse-power a year, and lights at 30 cents a light, and for a term of 25 years. By the contract of 1900, it was held that the term of the contract was practically extended to 84 years.

With these contentions Mr. Fitzpatrick did not agree. He held that the original contract was a lease for 84 years, being renewable every 21 years during the term of the lease from the Government to Mr. Davis of the water-power and site.

Reprimanded W.T.R. Preston.

Mr. Clarke asked what had been done with regard to the letter written by W. T. R. Preston on the Dundonald issue. Mr. Sifton said that Mr. Preston had been notified that his letter was entirely contrary to his duty as an officer of the Government. This notification had taken the form of a reprimand.

Mr. Fielding requested the Opposition to vote one-fifth of the items in the estimates not yet dealt with in order to meet some pressing accounts. His request was promptly granted by the leader of the Opposition, but Nat Boyd of McDonald pointed out that the calling of Parliament at a late date was responsible for the shortage of money to carry the Government through the fiscal year, and expressed the opinion that Parliament should be called not later than November.

In a discussion on the long sessions by Andy Ingram and Frank Oliver of Alberta a war of words followed, and the former charged that the latter's "independence" had ceased with the contracts given by the Government for printing to the latter's newspaper. Mr. Oliver said that the newspaper office with which he was connected had received printing from the Government ever since it was a newspaper.

G.T.P. Bill Passes Senate.

Ottawa, July 14.—Senator Dandurand moved the third reading of the Grand Trunk Pacific bill in the Upper House yesterday. After discussion for a short time the bill was read a third time and passed.

Dundonald Guest of Toronto.

Toronto, July 14.—During the stay of Lord Dundonald in Toronto he will be the guest of the citizens and apartments have been reserved for him at the Queen's. The Earl will arrive to-morrow morning from Ottawa and a luncheon will be tendered him by the individual members of the committee at the Toronto Club. The reception in Massey Hall will begin at 8 o'clock. The Queen's Own band and the 48th pipers will take part in the program. The Earl of Dundonald will of course be the chief speaker of the evening.

Imperial Officer Goes.

Melbourne, July 14.—The Cabinet of the Commonwealth, following the example of the Canadian Government, has decided to abolish the post of commandant of the forces on the expiration of General Hutton's term of office, replacing it by an advisory board, with an Inspector-General.

Stansbury Goes For Trial.

Toronto, July 14.—Dr. Chas. G. Stansbury was yesterday morning committed for trial on the charge of non-support preferred by his wife. He was allowed bail on two sureties of $500.

Russia Seeks Another Loan.

London, July 14.—Lord Rothschild informed the Associated Press yesterday afternoon that he had reason to believe that Russia was endeavoring to float another foreign loan.

YINKOW HAS BEEN CAPTURED BY MIKADO'S BRAVE SOLDIERS.

Russians Did Not Offer Resistance to Enemy's Occupation.

Brilliant Battle Fought Near the Black Mountains - Japanese Are Entrenching Themselves Five Miles From Tatchekiao—According to Russian Reports They Are Utilizing Kaichou to Land Supplies—Continuous Fighting.

Tokio, July 15.—It is reported that Yinkow has been occupied by the Japanese without any resistance upon the part of the Russian troops.

300 Russians Escaped.

London, July 15.—The Daily Chronicle's Tokio correspondent says that on July 14 the Japanese occupied Yinkow and that the 300 Russians who were in the town escaped with difficulty.

A Brilliant Battle.

Haicheng, Tuesday, July 12.—A detachment of Major-General Mistchenko's army fought a brilliant engagement to-day near the Black Mountains. Some prisoners were taken. The Japanese are entrenching themselves five miles from Tatchekiao. Terribly hot weather prevails.

Supplies Landed at Kaichou.

St. Petersburg, July 15.—A telegram from Lieut.-Gen. Sakharoff, reviewing the situation Wednesday, notes the continued Japanese advance on Tatchekiao, and continuous fighting along the Siuyen roads converging on Tangchi, ten miles southeast of Tatchekiao. The Russian outposts apparently were not offering serious resistance on either of the Siuyen roads or along the line of General Oku's advance. The Japanese are utilizing Kaichou to land supplies.

Gen. Sakharoff also reports the appearance of Gen. Kuroki's outposts considerably south of Liaoyang, indicating a general flanking movement on Haicheng.

The Japanese northern outposts are falling back on Saimatza, probably due to pressure on the part of General Rennenkampff.

Loss Dwindles to 2,800.

St. Petersburg, July 15. — The people of St. Petersburg retired last night in a happy frame of mind.

Private despatches received in St. Petersburg from Russian sources in the Far East confirm the reports from Mukden and Che Foo. According to a usually reliable source the Japanese losses were 2,800 and the Russian losses 1,800.

Late last night a despatch arrived from Tatchekiao communicating an undated despatch from Port Arthur received there July 13. It did not mention the assault or the repulse, but it is quite possible that it was sent from Port Arthur earlier than July 10, so that it cannot be fairly regarded as contradictory evidence.

There is a general conviction that if Viceroy Alexieff decided to communicate the report to the general staff, it must be true.

Lots of Money.

London, July 15.—M. Routhowsky, the financial attache of the Russian Embassy here, returned to London yesterday from St. Petersburg, where he conferred with Interior Minister Plehwe and the Minister of Finance. He said:

"My Government is not in need of money. It has not touched for military purposes a single franc of the loan concluded in France some time ago."

Armorclad Soldiers.

New York, July 15.—According to The Herald's Milan correspondent, the Russian Government has ordered 100,000 breastplates from a local company engaged in the manufacture of benediтti cuirasses for use by the Russian forces in the Far East.

ENGLAND WON.

After a Keen Fight For the MacKinnon Cup at Bisley.

Bisley Camp, July 15.—(C.A.P.)—Interest yesterday centred in the MacKinnon Cup competition, in which there were competing teams of twelve men from England, Scotland, Wales, Natal and New Zealand. From the first it was evident the struggle lay between the English and Scottish representatives, and after a keen fight victory ultimately declared for England.

The scores of the Canadians at the 800 yards range in the MacKinnon Cup contest were as follows:

AN AGREEMENT REACHED.

Final Draft of Fishery Regulations to Be Signed By Premier Bond.

London, July 15.—The Associated Press learns that an agreement has been reached between the British and Newfoundland Governments regarding the fishery regulations under the provisions of the Anglo-French Colonial Treaty. The final draft of these regulations, it is expected, will be signed to-day by Premier Bond, on behalf of Newfoundland.

The regulations constitute a compromise between the provisions enforced over the North Sea fisheries and those now imposed by the Newfoundland Government.

Arbitration May End Strike.

Chicago, Ill., July 15.—The strike which has demoralized the packing industry throughout the country has not yet been settled, but there are indications that it will soon be ended by the adjustment of the difficulties by arbitration.

Opium Smoking in China.

It is generally understood that a large percentage of the Chinese are addicted to the use of opium. This is a misconception. The belief that the Chinese of rank and culture use the drug is due to the prominence given to the cultivation of the plant and the manufacture of opium in the Celestial empire. As a matter of fact, a native who uses opium is looked upon by his superiors as we discuss and classify our drunkards.

The idea that a pill will produce an exhilarating effect on the beginner is also erroneous. One must be accustomed to the use of the drug to get the pleasant effect. The first pipe to an American produces nausea. Two or three will make him sick. If he can stand eight or nine of these "pills" he is apt to dream, but the awakening is always an unpleasant reality.

The Blue Lakes.

About twelve miles northwest from the town of Upper Lake, Cal., is a series of waters known as Blue lakes—three in all—surrounded by spurs of the coast range that tower 1,000 feet over them. These lakes are steel blue in color and never freeze. The upper lake is nearly two miles in length and half a mile in width in the widest place, the middle lake is about half a mile long and half that distance in width, and the lower one is less than half the size of the nearest neighbor. The upper lake is nearly 500 feet deep in places, and all of them abound in trout.

EXPENDITURE AND EFFICIENCY.

It is a favorite Grit argument, when making a reply to the damaging disclosures made by Lord Dundonald, to point out that they are spending more money on the Militia than the Conservatives did. This plea is shattered by the Montreal Gazette in the following very effective fashion:

"It is quite true that the Liberal administration has spent a little more annually than its predecessors on the Militia, but it is equally true that it has not given the Militia its full share of the financial prosperity of the country. For instance, in 1896 the Conservative Government took up the task of equipping the Canadian Militia efficiently. In that year no less than 5.24 per cent. of the total expenditure of the country was devoted to the Militia. Bearing in mind the recent boastings of the Government organs one would naturally suppose that the Liberal Government had increased that percentage. It, however, has done nothing of the kind. It, as a matter of fact, devoted only 4.07 per cent. of its total expenditure to the militia, as compared with the Conservative expenditure of 5.24 in 1896. Had it spent as much proportionately upon the Militia in 1903 as the Conservative Government spent in 1896, the total Militia expenditure last year, instead of being $2,391,232, would have amounted to about $700,000 more. Does that look as if the Militia had been, as the Laurier organs would have us understand at this juncture, the pampered pet of the Government? It has not been the pampered pet; it has not had its share of the country's prosperity. It has not had its fair share of the Government's willingness to spend money.

"If one is searching for the pampered pet of the Laurier administration one must turn to the expenditure made upon new public buildings in country villages and wharves where no traffic exists or is likely to come into existence. It is in this class of expenditure that the Laurier Administration has made its record. For instance, in 1896, of the total expenditure of the Conservative Government, only 3.5 per cent. was devoted to this class of public works, while last year the Liberal Government set aside no less than 9 per cent. of its total expenditure for this purpose. In other words, where the Conservatives in 1896 practically spent dollar for dollar upon these two classes of expenditure, the Militia and public works of this kind, the Liberals, in 1903, spent nearly two dollars upon the latter to every dollar they spent upon the militia. And why? Because in the opinion of the Liberal Government more votes can be purchased with a post office or a wharf than can be secured through the maintenance of the militia on an efficient basis. That is why. That is also why Lord Dundonald is leaving Canada."

A strong indictment, and one which cannot be gainsaid. And in addition to what the Gazette says it may be worth while to point out that the amount of money spent on it is not the best test of the efficiency of the Militia. Money can be wasted on the Militia as easily as in building useless wharves and breakwaters. For example, seven colonels in a company of 100 men means a large expenditure without, in any way adding to the efficiency of the force. The fact is that under Minister Borden's regime the militia has deteriorated very greatly. That was made plain beyond any denial in a speech made last Parliamentary session by Col. Thompson, the Liberal member for Haldimand. That speech has never been answered. Nor can it be. The policy of having seventeen Ministers of Militia, each "responsible" for a "district" and each making it his chief concern to look after the patronage, is killing the Militia as an effective fighting force. And wasting money is not going to mend the matter in any way.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

"Your remarks concerning automobiles," said a gentleman last night, "were timely. There is no denying the fact that the motor cars have rights on the highway, but that does not give them the privilege to run as fast as they like, or in any way they like, in the city limits. The other day my horse was standing, tied by a light chain, when an auto, without any warning, came whizzing down the street, behind my horse, and went by like a streak. The driver did not even take the trouble to keep on the other side of the street. He came within ten feet of my horse, which went wild, broke his chain and ran away. Luckily he was stopped before much damage was done, but there was an elegant opportunity for plenty of it."

The above just shows the recklessness which is alleged to be shown by some "chauffeurs" in this city. Not all of them, mind, we have no intention to say that. Some automobilists who drive in the city limits (we don't know what they do outside) run circumspectly, and take every precaution to guard against frightening horses. But others, according to the evidence of trustworthy witnesses, do not. We were told of a chauffeur who ran up behind a buggy driven by two ladies without warning, after being warned by a gentleman not to do so. The only answer was a laugh, and the consequence was that when the auto went by the ladies' horse the frightened quadruped jumped the sidewalk, smashed a fence and did his best to climb a tree. That may have been very fine fun for the chauffeur, but those nervous women, we will wager a small sum, did not enjoy the incident at all.

Now, it is high time the authorities took steps to put a stop to such practices as the above. Granted that the motor cars have rights on the King's Highway, they have no right to endanger the life and limb of even the humblest of His Majesty's subjects. This is not a joke; it is a mighty serious matter, and the fact that several residents of this city and vicinity are just now nursing bruised bodies as a result of runaways caused by automobiles proves it. The authorities should, without delay, search out the regulations bearing upon the driving of autos and have them posted in a conspicuous place. If the regulations are not stringent enough to suit the case of a small place like Belleville, let the Council pass some that are. And this should be done at once, before the undertaker gets busy.

Picton ratepayers emphatically voted down four money by-laws yesterday—to raise $25,000 for municipal buildings, $25,000 for walks and street improvements, $8,500 for electric light plant and $5,500 for waterworks. The people of little Picton evidently mean to keep the rates down, whether they are in the van of progress or not.

DIED IN LONDON TO-DAY.

MRS. COULDERY, A FORMER RESIDENT, PASSED AWAY AS THE RESULT OF AN OPERATION.

A cablegram from London announces the death of Mrs. B. A. Couldery, a former well-known resident of the Trent Road, just outside the city limits. Mrs. Couldery's death occurred to-day, following an operation which was performed ten days ago. The deceased lady had been ill for years, and her system was so enfeebled that she failed to rally after the operation, death taking place from heart failure.

When Mr. and Mrs. Couldery left this city for England they were accompanied by Miss Docter, daughter of the late Wm. Docter. Mrs. Docter will leave for England next week, to bring her daughter home.

STORY OF JAPANESE REVERSE NOT BELIEVED — CAMPAIGN PROCEEDS LIKE A GAME OF CHESS.

(The Globe.)

The failure to receive one word from an official source regarding the reported Japanese reverse at Port Arthur accompanied by great loss of life forces one to the conclusion that the Russian Consul at Chefoo, who set it afloat, is a great romancer. It will take more than fairy stories to wrest Japan's prey from her. Marshal Oyama, who took Port Arthur ten years ago, landed at Dalny on Wednesday and has taken charge of the besieging force. The task he has undertaken is a hard one, but to it he has given years of study. He knows the defences almost as well as the Russians themselves do, and the suggestion that the Japanese troops will hurl themselves in their impetuosity into the "ditches four and five fathoms deep hewn out of the solid rock," instead of going at the trenches like careful soldiers, is the worst kind of nonsense.

The Japanese main approach seems to be from the east, probably because of the facilities the harbor there offers for landing supplies and guns. The positions already captured are on the northeastern angle of the defences. The besiegers are now facing the Drakovy, or first position, which some critics regard as the key to all the works defending Port Arthur. These first line defences begin at the sea front and extend inland for a mile and a half. On the sea front there is a big fort, perched 450 feet up, with two batteries facing seaward. There are to the landward of this two great earthworks and seven smaller ones. Eighty large guns are mounted on the Drakovy position, including two of eleven inches, 32 of nine inches and 46 of six inches. The earthworks are protected against scaling, and five detached forts in the rear are supposed to make an assault from that direction impracticable.

The Drakovy position, indeed, was held to be impregnable, if defended by resolute men, before the experience gained at the battle of Kinchow. The marvellous staying power shown by the Japanese on that day rather staggers the holders of the theory of impregnability, but it is still conceded on all hands that the Drakovy position is a mighty hard nut to crack. The fact is that Oyama is not at all unlikely to keep the Russians in the trenches of the Drakovy line by feints and try to take Port Arthur as Wolfe took Quebec, by a sudden rush at some of the precipitous heights near the harbor entrance.

In the north the campaign proceeds like a game of chess. The Japanese have been pushing forward their men and the Russians have as steadily been retiring theirs. Yinkow has been evacuated, and only a few Russians remain in Newchwang. The Japs are only five miles from Tatchekiao. The coming battle, for battle there must be, will be fought near Haicheng, and the chances are that it will occur within ten days. An attempt on the part of Kuropatkin to retreat to Mukden would at once precipitate it.

The Snake and the Eagle.

The American consul at Guayaquil, Ecuador, tells a good story about the difficulties he has had to keep a monkey on the consulate premises because of the depredations of the boa constrictors, and these agile little pets must keep a constant lookout for them. If Jocko drops into a doze he is likely to "wake up dead."

On the occasion with which the story deals a monkey's life was saved by the picture of the American eagle. The consulate sign all over the world is a fine reproduction of the king of birds in full color and with outspread wings. A new sign had just been received and was waiting on a chair inside the room. A big boa constrictor chased the house monkey across the yard and through the open window. Jocko was making a good race, but a losing one. He was in the corner, quaking with fear and very near death's door, when his pursuer confronted the picture of the eagle in its menacing attitude. A snake fears eagles even more than it craves monkeys, and that particular reptile turned tail and went out of the window as quickly as if the devil was after it. That monkey was a smart monkey, and now whenever it wants to take a nap it goes to roost over the picture of the eagle.

Why the House Fell Down.

An English traveler on his way from Morocco tells of a curious experience he had while making a trip by camel inland from Mogador.

"We had built a hut of wattle branches to shelter us from the wind. In the middle of the night I dreamed that I was shooting rabbits in the bracken of Essex and suddenly awoke to find myself covered with vegetable matter. Every one has experienced the curious feeling of hopeless bewilderment which comes over a man when he wakes in the dark among strange surroundings. I found that one of our camels had literally eaten us out of house and home, for he had broken his tether in the night, walked over and devoured the wattled branches of our hut to such an extent that the sides and roof collapsed upon our sleeping forms."

The Eye of a Giraffe.

Giraffes are the most difficult of all animals to take by surprise. No matter from what direction you may approach the giraffe is sure to discover you. It has been called the original "rubberneck." It is not generally known that nature, because of the height of its eyes from the ground, has supplied it with a talent peculiarly its own for making observations. As a matter of fact, a giraffe can see in all directions at the same time without moving its head. The eyes are large and prominent and so placed at the side of the head that, bulging out as they do, they are capable of seeing backward as well as forward.

The Sea of Space.

The human mind cannot comprehend what is meant by the four little words in the expression "the sea of space." If the volume of "space" included within our solar system—which is perhaps but a single train of planets among hundreds of millions of a similar kind—were occupied by one single globe 5,000,000,000 miles in diameter it would be but as a feather in the marvelous spread of "vacancy" surrounding it. In fact, it has been calculated that in the space occupied by our solar system 2,700,000,000,000,000 globes the size of our earth could revolve, each at a distance of 300,000 miles from the other.

Curious Bread Law.

There is a curious provision in the British bread acts of 1822 and 1836, which are still in force, to the effect that "every person who shall make for sale or sell or expose for sale any bread made wholly or partially of peas or beans or potatoes or of any sort of corn or grain other than wheat shall cause all such bread to be marked with a large Roman 'M.'" It would thus appear that the baker who chooses to put potatoes in his bread could escape the charge of adulteration by marking the loaf with this letter in the manner described.

Rough and Ready Wooing.

The Australian aborigine when weary of a single life looks about for a partner, and, finding one to his liking, stalks her, and, watching his opportunity, stuns her with a heavy blow and carries her off to her new home, where it is to be hoped, on her return to consciousness, his after tenderness makes some atonement for his somewhat rough and ready way of wooing.

A Possibility.

He—If you don't intend to break your engagement with me why do you allow young Richmann to make you such valuable presents? She—My father advised me to accept them. He—He did! Why? She—He said that if I married you they might come in handy.

Time Coming For Fairy Tales.

Little girl, you who are so insistent that I tell you fairy tales now, wait till you are grown up and married, and then you'll hear fairy tales in plenty.

Two of a Kind.

Mrs. A. Cerbity—You have accepted Henry! Why, you know very well I don't approve of him. Her Daughter—That's all right, mother. Neither does he approve of you!

Ambiguous.

She—I am afraid we shall have trouble with servants after we are married. He—I won't mind that, dear, as long as I have you.

Life without laughter is a machine without oil.

Easy Explanation.

"How do you account for the fact," asked the doctor, "as shown by actual investigation, that thirty-two out of every hundred criminals in the country are left handed?"

"That's easily accounted for," said the professor. "The other sixty-eight are right handed."

Bearing the Expense.

"Does your husband keep any horses?"

"Yes," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "He keeps a number of them. But other people own them and manage the races."

Things which are so heavy on a woman's conscience they cause it to sag don't leave an impression on a man's.

Tobolsk, where the Siberian Cossack is reared, is a well watered region, with 1,000 lakes, many of them of considerable size. Many of the inhabitants had their origin in the utilization of the territory as a penal colony for European Russia. The people are still very primitive, sheep being the unit of exchange in their barter system. Cattle breeding is extensively adopted, and it is from this source that the Russian army draws most of its horses for service in the far east. These animals are small and hardy, not particular about food and capable of enduring extreme heat and cold, but the load they can take even on a level road is only about 900 pounds. The preparatory class of the Cossacks comprises lads from the age of eighteen, who undergo three years' training. The Cossacks of the first ranks are enrolled from the age of twenty-one for a period of twelve years, and all serve for a further period of five years in the reserves, the age of discharge being, therefore, thirty-eight.

The Calendar Calculation.

Caesar's reformed calendar made the year about eleven minutes too long—that is, the solar year began eleven minutes earlier each twelvemonth than the calendar year. In 1582 Pope Gregory XIII. found that the solar year had gained ten days on the calendar year. He corrected this and to keep the two years more nearly together ordered that thereafter only centurial years divisible by 400 should be leap years. This calculation is this: By adding eleven minutes regularly to the year, at the end of a century the legal calendar has had one more day than the solar calendar. By giving up the additional day of leap year in three centurial years the legal calendar has at the end of three centuries nearly one day less than the solar calendar. This difference is corrected by having an extra day in the fourth centurial year. The arrangement is so nearly exact that the two years differ by only one day in 3,323 years.

MYSTICAL NUMBER NINE.

It Is a Trinity of Trinities and Is Indicative of Perfection.

Nine is a trinity of trinities and indicates perfection or completion. There are nine earths, nine heavens, nine gods, nine muses, nine worthies, nine crosses, nine points of the law, nine rivers of hell, nine orders of angels and nine circles of rank in Clines society. Milton, in "Paradise Lost," says: "The gates of hell are thrice threefold—three folds are brass, three folds iron and three folds adamantine rock. They had nine folds, nine plates and nine linings." When the angels were cast out of heaven "nine days they fell."

A cat has nine lives. There are nine crowns in heraldry. Possession is nine points of the law. The whip for punishing evil doers had nine tails, the superstition being that a flogging by a trinity of trinities would be sacred and more efficacious. In order to see the fairies, mortals are directed to put nine grains of wheat on a four leaf clover. The hydra had nine heads. Leases were formerly granted for 999 years. Even now they run for ninety-nine years, the dual of a trinity of trinities. To see nine magpies is most unlucky, as the old Scotch rhyme goes:

> One's a sorrow, two's mirth,
> Three's a wedding, four's a birth,
> Five's a christening, six a dearth,
> Seven's heaven, eight is hell,
> And nine's the devil his ane sel'.

If a servant finds nine green peas in a pea pod she may lay it on the lintel of the kitchen floor, and the first man that enters is to be her cavalier. When the loving cup goes round it is the custom to drink a three times three toast to the one most highly honored or tenderly loved. As the weird sisters in "Macbeth" danced round the caldron they sang, "Thrice to thine and thrice to mine and thrice again to make up nine," and then declared "the charm would up." The nine of diamonds was considered the curse of Scotland.

A TOBACCO LEGEND.

The Story of the Way In Which Man Obtained the Weed.

An ethnologist tells an interesting story as to how tobacco was first obtained by man, according to the traditions of the Menominee Indians:

"One day the god hero, Manabozo, was on a journey, when he perceived a delightful odor. It seemed to come from a crevice in the cliffs high up on a mountain side. On going closer he found a tavern which was occupied by a giant. In fact, the giant was the tenant of the mountain, and from the mouth of the cave a passage led down into the very center of the hill, where there was a large chamber. Around the chamber were stacked great quantities of bags filled with curious dried leaves. From the leaves proceeded the delicious fragrance.

"These leaves were tobacco. Once a year, the giant explained, all of the spirits came to the mountain for the purpose of smoking this exquisite weed. But it was not possible to give any of it away," said the ethnologist. "Nevertheless Manabozo watched for an opporunity and, snatching up one of the bags, fled, closely pursued by the giant. The thief leaped from peak to peak, but the giant followed so fast as to finally overtake him. So Manabozo turned upon him and, upbraiding him for his stinginess, transformed him into a grasshopper.

"That is the reason why the grasshopper is always chewing tobacco. Manabozo took the bagful of leaves and distributed them among his friends, the ancestors of the Indians of today. Since then they have had the use and enjoyment of the plant."

How Bacon Settled Him.

A story that is told of Leonard Bacon, who was one of the best known theologians in New England in the latter half of the nineteenth century, illustrates the absurdity of a popular kind of argument. Dr. Bacon was attending a conference in one of the New England cities, and some assertions he made in his address were vehemently objected to by a member of the opposition.

"Why," he expostulated, "I never heard of such a thing in all my life!"

"Mr. Moderator," rejoined Bacon calmly, "I cannot allow my opponent's ignorance, however vast, to offset my knowledge, however small."

A Queer Custom.

Between the mountains of India and Persia is a powerful tribe among whom an extraordinary custom prevails. Women's rights have apparently received full recognition, for the ladies of the tribe can choose their own husbands. All a single woman has to do when she wishes to change her state is to send a servant to pin a handkerchief to the hat of a man on whom her fancy lights, and he is obliged to marry her unless he can show that he is too poor to purchase her at the price her father requires.

FOUL BREATH, CATARRH, HEADACHE

Are Banished by Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. It relieves in 10 minutes.

F. A. Bottom, druggist, Cookshire, Que., says: "For 20 years I suffered from Catarrh. My breath was very offensive even to myself. I tried everything which promised me a cure. In almost all instances I had to proclaim them no good at all. I was induced to try Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. I got relief instantly after first application. It cured me and I am free from all effects of it." 49

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Co c, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

CLOTHES AND THE MOTH.

Plans For Keeping Winter Garments Safe Through the Summer.

The most effectual way to render a house moth proof is to give it each recurring spring and fall a general and thorough cleaning. One of the arch enemies of the moth is cleanliness. Another is light. This pest, like all evil doers, loves dark haunts and dirt and hates the sunlight, says a writer in Good Housekeeping.

To the possessor of a cedar chest or wardrobe the task of storing clothing is a comparatively easy one.

Moth balls are considered by many to be adequate protection if dropped among stored articles. But on account of the disagreeable odor which clings to garments long after unpacking their use becomes objectionable.

All fur garments, rugs and the like should be safely stored before there has been heat enough to transform the chrysalid into the winged insect. The preliminary step in putting away furs for the summer is to give them a thorough combing with a dressing comb, thereby dislodging any possible torpid worm or eggs. Then after beating well and airing sprinkle freely with pulverized gum camphor, cedar dust, tobacco leaves or anything else highly aromatic, and dispose of the furs in paper flour sacks of ample size.

Do not tie the openings of the sacks but instead turn the edges over and paste them down with a strip of muslin. When flour sacks are not obtainable make sacks of newspapers, pasting, not sewing, the edges together. Printers' ink is said to be peculiarly obnoxious to moths and other insects.

Blankets may be safely stored in such receptacles provided always the blankets are clean. Indeed too much stress cannot be laid upon the necessity for having all stored articles scrupulously clean.

The oil of cedar is said to be a sure preventive against the ravages of moths. As to oil stains, care must be taken that it does not come in contact with clothing. To use it, saturate balls of cotton wadding and drop them in tightly closed boxes and trunks.

The materials which are required are one spool of linen thread, either white or ecru, No. 60, and a rather fine steel hook. Crochet silk may be used instead of the thread and will make a very handsome collar.—Designer.

The Museum and the Dwelling House

In the rage for articles of virtu, which has been prevalent several years, the well to do have filled their parlors and cabinets and mantelshelves with articles of genuine value indeed, but in many cases of no artistic grace. A museum is one thing, and a dwelling house is another. The two are sometimes confounded, even among the more cultured classes.

Cucumber Sandwiches.

Between buttered slices of moist, steamed brown bread lay thin slices of cucumber coated with mayonnaise dressing. These are very delicious, but should be eaten soon after they are made.

FOSTER YOUR TALENTS.

Every Girl Can Do One Thing Well if She Will Only Try.

It is the girl who does things in this world who is attractive, both to men and to her own sex, which last counts a little, too, in the long run.

You may not be able to do great things, to paint great pictures or to sing in grand opera, but you can learn to make bright little things for yourself and your friends and perhaps to play the light, "catchy" airs of the day so that your friends will enjoy them, and if you can't do anything else cultivate the art of talking brightly and of being sympathetic.

Every girl can do one thing well if she will only take the trouble to find out what that thing is. The difficulty is that she often looks in the opposite direction. She wants to do something great and showy or nothing at all. But there are other talents within reach if she will only look, and these talents may be such a comfort to her in her dark hours that they will make life better and happier both for her and those about her.

How the world likes a cheerful, plucky girl who makes a brave fight and hides her skeleton in a closet instead of folding her hands and whining because things don't come her way —the girl who puts her own griefs as much as possible aside—who takes a wholesome interest in life!

DAINTY BEDSPREAD.

One of Linen Embroidered In Floral Patterns and Hemstitched.

A dainty bedspread is always a joy to dainty housekeepers. Bedspreads of linen embroidered in floral patterns and further embellished by hemstitching are well liked by many housewives and give special scope for the display of needle skill, as the pattern may be as simple or as ornate as the embroiderer elects. In the accompanying design the poppy is the flower chosen for exploitation, and, executed in the most careful manner, it makes a most effective decoration. Embroidery on a bedspread of linen is always carried out in self color, and therefore some distinctive design is usually chosen.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Tool Chest For Women.

That women are becoming recognized as the equals of men is evinced by the fact that at last they are thought worthy of having a tool chest of their own. These necessities are for sale in nearly all the stores, well stocked with the tools mostly needed for tinkering.

A hammer, tack hammer with clamp at the end for removing tacks, a gimlet, screwdriver, monkey wrench, gas plier, chisel and a jackknife are among the equipments of the ideal chest. A glue pot is also necessary, as there are so many and frequent collapsings of joints in dolls as well as furniture. With tacks and nails of all sizes in their appointed niche, the woman of the household is as well equipped to make and mend as is the handy man.

It is quite a fad among women who do wood carving or pyrography to make their own chests, decorating the covers elaborately and fitting the interiors with various compartments.

Mothers and Children.

It might be truly said that the mother of today rules the world of tomorrow. As the mother is, so are her children. A refined, intelligent mother who is the same in her everyday life as when she entertains her most agreeable and fashionable guests is surely a pleasure and a blessing to her children. Her tenderness and her charms, her habits of speech and perfect manners make an impression on her children which they scarcely ever forget. Rough men and noisy boys will quiet down beneath her pleasant smiles and kindly words, for she it is who is ever ready to do all in her power to help those burdened with toil and care. Children, comfort and cherish your mothers, and, mothers, be true and faithful in the discharge of your duties to those whom God has intrusted to your keeping.—Designer.

Pretty Table Decoration.

A basket of flowers and trailing vines formed a hanging centerpiece that was greatly admired at a recent luncheon. The basket is suspended from the center chandelier, if there is one, and from the ceiling if there isn't. It hangs to within a few inches from the table, and from it depend vines and sprays or sometimes ribbons. The idea is capable of innumerable possibilities.

Poisonous Medicines.

Great care should be taken in administering remedies in the form of tinctures which have stood for a long time in small vials in the family medicine closet. When the bottles happen to be loosely corked the alcohol readily evaporates, leaving the drug in the form of a concentrated tincture the pharmacopoeial dose of which might produce very serious if not fatal results.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Look out for the man with an imagination strong enough to draw a dollar out of your pocket.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Only 900 people in 1,000,000 die of old age.

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieves the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in this country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) pose for a sketch while you said sweet things to her. Have you a picture of her?"

"No, I am sorry to say I have not. Remember, she has been hidden on an island all her life, and I doubt if she ever had a picture taken."

"And when will you take me to see her? I am so anxious to meet this fairy of the shore who has stolen my brother's heart. Can't we go down there before I return home?"

"We can," he added, "but I think we'd better wait until spring."

The next day he informed her he had secured a box at a theater for that evening and had invited the Nasons to join them. "I thought it would relieve your mind a little, Alice," he added, "to meet your bogy on neutral ground."

Mrs. Nason was a long way from being the haughty specter Alice had conjured up. That a country schoolma'am was proud enough to discourage her son's attentions because of the difference in their positions awakened her curiosity. "I should like to meet Miss Page," she said to Blanch when the latter had asked if she might invite her to visit them. "A girl that shows the spirit she does is certainly worth cultivating."

When Alice's cool but polite note reached Mrs. Nason she was piqued to even a greater degree of curiosity, and when Albert's courteous letter inviting "Mrs. Nason and family to share a box at the theater for the purpose of meeting my sister" was received she returned a cordial acceptance by bearer.

To Alice the proposed meeting was a source of dread, and when the carriage called for Albert and herself she was in an excited state of mind. They had barely taken their seats in the box when the usher knocked, and Blanch, followed by the rest of the family, entered. That young lady greeted Alice with an effusive kiss, and the next instant she found herself shaking hands with a rotund and gray haired lady of dignified bearing, but of kind and courteous manner. An introduction to Edith followed, and then Frank acknowledged her polite "How do you do, Mr. Nason?" with his very best bow.

Mrs. Nason began chatting with Alice.

Mrs. Nason began chatting with Alice in the pleasantest way and with seemingly cordial interest in all she said, while Blanch kept quiet and Edith devoted herself to Albert. It was after the second curtain when Mrs. Nason said: "I must insist that you divide your visit with us, Miss Page, and allow us to return a little of your hospitality. Of course I understand that your brother comes first, and rightly, too, but we must claim a part of your time."

"I had promised myself one or two evenings at your home," Alice answered quietly, "but I do not feel that I ought to desert Bertie more than that."

Then, for the first time, Blanch put in her little word: "Now, do not offer your brother as an excuse. I have been anticipating your promised visit for a long time, and no brother is going to rob me of it. I shall come around tomorrow forenoon, and if you are not ready to go back with me, bag and baggage, I will just take your baggage, and then you will have to come."

"I do not see why you cannot see your brother and visit with him just as well at our house," put in Mrs. Nason. "He is always welcome there."

Alice turned to her brother, remarking, "It is nice of you to insist, and I am more than grateful, but it must be as he says." Then she added prettily, "He is my papa and mamma now, and the cook and captain bold and mate of the Nancy brig as well."

"I will stir up a mutiny on the Nancy brig if he does not consent," laughed Blanch; "so there is an end to that, and you must be ready at 10 tomorrow."

CHAPTER XXXIX.

BLANCH had kept her threat and literally taken possession of her new friend and installed her in the guest room of the Nason residence. To be taken in hand, as it were, by a cultured and wealthy young lady, and to have a liveried and obsequious coachman on duty to convey them anywhere and everywhere was a new experience. It was not long ere Alice began to feel herself quite at home in the Nason family and to notice that Mrs. Nason treated her in a motherly way.

"I see that you are fond of your little charges," she said, after Alice had described her school and some of the peculiarities of her pupils who wore outgrown roundabouts or calico pinafores, "and I suppose they grow fond of you as well."

"I try to make them," replied Alice, "and I find that is the easiest way to govern them. I seldom have to punish any one. In a way, children are like grown people, and a little tact and a few words said in the right way are more potent than fear of punishment."

"And do you not find life in so small a place rather monotonous?" asked Mrs. Nason.

"Oh, yes," replied Alice, "it is not much like city life. It is delightful to have theaters and the excitement of social duties, as I imagine you have all the time, and yet I am not sure I should like it. I fancy once in awhile I should sigh for a shady spot in the woods in summer where I could read a book or hear the birds sing. It is only in winter that I should like to live in the city."

Alice's stay in Boston passed rapidly until only two days were left, when Blanch said to her, "I have invited a few of my friends here to meet you tonight, and I want you to sing for me."

"Oh, please do not ask that," replied Alice hastily. "I do not sing well enough."

"But you sing in church, and that is much harder."

"That is nothing," answered Alice, smiling. "Not one in ten of those country people know one note from another. Here all your friends hear the finest operatic singers, and I would cut a sorry figure in contrast."

"But you will sing just once to please me, won't you?" pleaded Blanch.

"I will not promise. I will see how many are here and how my courage holds out."

When that evening came Blanch waited until Alice had become somewhat acquainted with the little gathering and the reserve had worn away, when she went to her and, putting one arm around her waist, whispered, "Come, now, dear, just one little song; only one to please me." At first Alice thought to refuse, but her pride came to the rescue, and the feeling that she would show her friend that she was not a timid country girl gave her the needed courage, and she arose and stepped across the room to the grand piano that stood in one corner. Her cheeks were flushed, and a defiant curl was on her lips, and then without a moment's hesitation she seated herself and sang "The Last Rose of Summer." She had sung it many, many times before, and every trill and exquisite quiver of its pathos was as familiar to her as the music of the brook where she had played in childhood. She sang as she never had before, and to an audience that listened entranced. When the last sweet note had passed her red lips, she arose quickly and returned to her seat. Two little tears stole out of Mrs. Nason's eyes, to be quickly brushed away with a priceless bit of lace. Sweet Alice, the motherless little country girl, had from that moment entered the heart of Mrs. Nason. When the applause had subsided, it was Frank that next pleaded.

"Won't you sing one for me now, Miss Page?" he asked. "I bought the song I wanted today." And, going to the piano, he unrolled and spread upon the music rack—"Ben Bolt!"

"But I only consented to sing once for Blanch," Alice replied, "and there are others here who I am sure can do much better."

"Come, please," he said coaxingly, "just this one for me." And once more Alice touched the keys.

Back to a simply furnished parlor in Sandgate, with its lamp on the piano and open fire burning brightly as it had one year ago, went two of that company in thought, and maybe others there, whose youth had been among country scenes, were carried back to them by the singer's voice and saw a byway schoolhouse "and a shaded nook by a running brook" in fancy, or perhaps a little white stone in some grass grown corner, where, "obscure and alone," lay a boyhood's sweetheart! All the pathos of our lost youth trilled in the voice of Alice Page as she sang that old, old song. Not one in that little audience but was enthralled by the winsome witchery of her voice and for the moment was young again in thought and feeling. When the guests had departed Mrs. Nason turned to Alice and, taking her face in her hands, exclaimed, "I want to kiss the lips that have brought tears to my eyes tonight."

The last evening of her visit she decided to spend with her brother, and when she came to bid adieu to her hostess that much dreaded haughty mother had resolved herself into a charming lady.

WINDSOR SALT is the best Salt for Table and Dairy—No adulteration— Never cakes.

"It is odd, Bertie," she said to her brother that evening when they were alone together, "how different people seem when one comes to know them. From one or two things which you have said and an admission that Frank made a year ago I felt I should be sure to hate his mother, and now I think she is perfectly lovely."

"So she is to those she likes," answered Albert. "You carried her heart by storm last evening as well as the rest of the company. I never heard you sing so well."

"I am glad I didn't break down, anyway," she replied, "for when I touched the piano my heart seemed in my mouth."

For an hour they discussed the Nasons, while Albert noticed his sister avoided any mention of Frank, and then he said: "Well, sis, which of the places we have looked at do you think I best engage, and when will you be ready to move?"

Alice pursed her lips and looked at the shipwreck scene near her as if it contained a revelation.

"I am not so sure," she answered finally, "that we should make the change at present. If I were certain your beautiful waif of the sea would adhere to her filial resolution, it would be different. If you secure this legacy for her that you told me about and she donates it to those old people, as you say she intends to, the next thing will be an invitation to my dear brother's wedding. That is one reason why I hesitate to make this change. Another is that I do not think it would be good for Aunt Susan. She says she is willing, but when she has left all the associations of her life behind she will just sit and grieve her poor old heart away in silence."

"I want to kiss the lips that have brought tears to my eyes."

"My dear sister, have you considered Frank in your calculations?"

Alice's blue eyes assumed an expression like unto a pansy and her face the placidity of a mill pond as she answered, "I had quite forgotten his existence!"

CHAPTER XL.

WHEN on the morning of her departure from Boston Alice stood beside the train exchanging the usual goodby words with her brother, she was surprised at being joined by Blanch and Frank. The former brought her a basket of lunch, sent with her mother's compliments, and the latter an elaborate bouquet of flowers.

"I want to kiss you goodby," said Blanch, and when the two had embraced, Alice kissed her brother and took her seat. No one apparently noticed that Frank was not on the platform when the train started, and when it was well under way Alice was astonished to see him enter the car.

"You will not object to my company home, will you?" he asked. "I thought you might be lonesome, and as I have not had a chance to talk to you since you came to Boston I decided to go up with you. I can come back on the night train, or if you prefer to ride alone I can get off at the next station."

"Oh, no; I am very glad of your company," she replied, "and it was good of you to think of it. It is a long ride, and I have had such a nice time I should have been disconsolate. You did not know," she added archly, "that one reason I came to Boston was to look at flats. Bert wants us to come here and keep house for him—Aunt Susan and me."

"And are you going to do it? I hope so, for that would give me a chance to take you to the theaters."

"No, the plan is off for the present," she answered. "Not but that I would like to, but we think it is not best for Aunt Susan."

For an hour they trundled along through the snow clad country, chatting commonplaces, and then Alice said, "Did you meet the island girl last summer that you told me Bert had fallen in love with?"

"Only once. Bert invited her and the old lady on board the Gypsy and introduced them. They remained only long enough to look the yacht over. I left that day."

"What did you think of this girl?" asked Alice hastily. "Tell me what she looks like."

"She has a beautiful figure and eyes like yours, which you know are what I admire, only they are not so full of mischief. They have a faraway look that makes you think her thoughts are a thousand miles away."

"How was she dressed?"

"Oh, I haven't the least idea," was the answer. "She might have worn calico for all I could tell. The only thing I can remember is that her dress was tight fitting and very plain."

Alice smiled.

"Those faraway eyes must have entranced you, your description is so lucid," she replied sarcastically. "How long did Bert stay there after you came away?"

"Only a few days. I never asked him. I told him to keep and use the Gypsy as long as he wanted, and then I cut stick for Blanch and—Sandgate."

He seemed to dwell upon the little outing, and Alice, noticing this, fought shy of the subject.

"Well, how do you like my haughty mother now," he asked, "if that is a fair question?"

"I think she is the most gracefully charming hostess I ever met, and you ought to be proud of her. You conveyed a wrong impression of her to me the first time I met you."

"I am sorry if I did," replied Frank. "I did not mean to. Mother fell in love with you the night you sang, and I knew she would. That is why I almost begged you to sing."

When the hills of Sandgate were visible he said, "I have an hour before the returning train and just time enough to see you safely home."

Alice looked at him with surprise.

"And that is your idea of my hospitality," she exclaimed, "to let you go away like that? The morning train is the earliest one you can escape on, and if I am not good enough company for you this evening, you can go and call on Abby Miles."

What a surprised and glad old lady Aunt Susan was when the two stepped off the train.

"Don't mind me, Aunt Susan," Frank said with easy familiarity. "I am not a visitor, I am a big brother escorting a lone sister home."

How kindly that wrinkled face beamed on him behind her spectacles while he insisted that she stand by and let him unharness and see to the horse as she directed. And how willingly he carried baskets of wood in and started the parlor fire.

"I did not know you could make yourself so useful," Alice observed.

When supper was over he asked her all manner of questions about her school, when she meant to open it again, how the old miller was, what had become of the boat, how the mill pond looked in winter, and had she been there since the day she gathered lilies. "Always back to that spot," she thought.

When he asked her to sing "The Last Rose of Summer" she exclaimed with a pretty pout: "I do not want to sing that. It reminds me how scared I was when I sang it last."

"But you brought tears into most of our eyes that night."

"Do you want to weep again?" she asked archly, looking up at him and smiling. "If you say you do, I will sing it."

"No," he answered, and then hesitating a moment added: "I do not feel that way tonight. I may when train time comes tomorrow."

Her eyes fell, and rising quickly, like a scared bird anxious to escape, turned away.

But a strong hand clasped one of hers, and then she heard him say: "Am I to go away tomorrow happy or miserable? You know what I came up here to ask. You know what I have worked and studied and waited for all the long year since first I saw you and for whom I have tried to become a useful man in the world instead of an idler. It was to win you and to ask this that I came here today."

Then she felt an arm clasp her waist and a voice that trembled a little say:

"Answer me, sweet Alice, is it yes or no?"

And then he felt her supple form yield a trifle, and as he gathered her close in his arms her proud head touched his shoulder.

CHAPTER XLI.

THE winter had passed and March returned when one morning Albert received a bulky envelope bearing the Stockholm postmark and containing numerous legal papers and a lengthy letter. He did not notice Frank when he came in or even hear his greeting, and well might Albert be keenly absorbed in those documents, for they made him the emissary privileged to lay at the feet of the girl he loved—a fortune!

No more need she devote herself to her foster parents, no more need Uncle Terry putter over lobster traps in rain or shine, or good, patient Aunt Lissy bake, wash and mend, year in and year out.

Here was more than they could spend in all the years that were left them, and what a charming privilege it would be to him to place in her loving hand the means to make glad and bless those kindly people who had cared for her as their own, and what a sweet door of hope it opened for him!

Then, for the first time, he noticed Frank watching him with smiling interest.

"Well," remarked that cheerful young man, "I'm glad to see you emerge from your trance and return to earth again. I've said good morning twice and watched you for half an hour and you didn't even know I was in the room."

When Frank had perused the most interesting of the documents he gave a low whistle and said:

"Now, methinks, somebody will be taking a wedding trip to the Land of the Midnight Sun in the near future. I congratulate you, my dear boy, and you can have the Gypsy when you are ready." Then he added shyly, "Maybe it can be arranged so there can be four in the party."

The next morning Albert, bearing the legal evidence of Telly's heritage and with buoyant heart, left for Southport. Late in the afternoon the little boat bearing him as sole passenger

To be Continued.

Perjury as a Fine Art.

In India, according to an Englishman who lived there many years, the more educated class reduce perjury to a fine art. If a case is to come before the court they are not content with coaching their witnesses beforehand, but they take them to the very spot where the deed was committed and go through all the incidents of the assault or tragedy to be sworn to, so that the various subpoenaed witnesses are little likely to be caught by any cross examination, no matter how severe it may be. He cites an instance of the methods of the ordinary Hindoo lawyer. A British officer had made a number of purchases of a Parsee merchant, who charged him such unreasonable prices that he refused to pay the bill. The merchant brought suit, and the officer consulted a lawyer, who agreed to take the case and win it if he were not interfered with. This was promised. When the trial came off, the defense promptly acknowledged the purchase of the articles at the prices named, but produced half a dozen witnesses who swore that they had seen the bill paid.

A Remarkable Schoolroom.

One of the most remarkable schoolrooms in the world is surely that of La Petite Roquette, the Paris prison for juvenile offenders. The system of this prison is that of solitary confinement, the whole building being so constructed that each of the detached cells is overlooked by a warder stationed on a small observation tower. The schoolroom consists of 200 cells in the form of an amphitheater, from each of which the teacher, and the teacher only, can be seen. Each of the youthful offenders takes his place in silence, the first in the farthermost cell and the others in rotation. The closing of one of these cell doors opens that of the next cell. The voice of the teacher is the only sound to be heard in the building. Religious services are conducted in the same way, each of the inmates being able to see the officiating clergyman, and him alone.

The Wild Boar of India.

General Sir Montague Gerard of the British army in his book of reminiscences has much to say about hunting. During his twenty years' residence in India he killed nearly 200 tigers, some of them dreaded man eaters, while his bags of other wild animals would be difficult to number. Terrible as is the tiger, the wild boar is even more savage and dangerous to attack. His tusks frequently grow to nine or ten inches in length and are as sharp as a razor. Tigers have a special dread of him, and in their encounters, which sometimes happen, he nearly always comes out victor. In pig sticking, which is always done with a spear on horseback, there is constant danger of his disemboweling horses, in which case the rider often suffers also. General Gerard had many narrow escapes.

A Promising Camp.

One of the most promising districts in British Columbia is that lying about the thriving city of Kamloops, B.C. The unlimited resources of the Pacific Province are shown here in all variety: Grazing lands, where thousands of cattle live and grow fat on the nutritious bunch grass; fruit lands in the valleys, farm lands on the benches, and mining lands on the mountains with good transportation facilities; an enterprising community and a glorious climate will make the Kamloops district.

A large amount of progress has been made in all lines, but the riches to be wrested from nature's treasure vaults in gold and silver and copper attract most attention. As a mining camp the district has not been boomed by the unscrupulous promoter but development has gone on quietly until to-day it is proved beyond a doubt that in all the rich sections of the great Dominion, Kamloops is second to none. The Cherry Creek Copper King mines, whose advertisement appears in another column, have secured one of the most promising properties in the camp, which was secured on very favorable terms. John Redman, M.E., in his annual report on the camp, says:—

"This group of claims, which is well known, possess some promising and extensive showings on the continuation of the Iron Mask lead. The following extract from the Company's prospectus fairly describes these, and I believe is a conservative description:

"The veins on the 'O.K.' which have been opened up by surface work and a shaft east and west at the 50-foot level is a true fissure, about 90 feet in width at the shaft. The strike of the lead is northeast and southwest, with a dip to the southeast of about 60 degrees. The ore bodies are lenticular, occurring throughout the vein filling. From these lenses a high-grade pyritic copper ore assaying from 10 per cent. to 10 per cent. copper and from $4 to $8 in gold is taken. A sampling of the fissure where exposed in the shaft gave an average of 12.60 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

"A parallel vein on the Prince Charles has been opened up by a small shaft and a good body of medium grade pyritic ore uncovered. The extent of this body is apparently large but must be proved by further development. Average assays of this body give 70 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

The company embraces some of the most responsible and successful business men of the Interior, and is setting forth its plans with a care and foresight not always devoted to the most prominent mining enterprises."

A perusal of their advertisement will show the plan for securing the shareholders.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

One Meets With Nature's Surprises There at Every Turn.

Probably no area of equal extent contains so great a number of natural objects capable of arousing wonder, enthusiasm and awe as are found crowded together in the park. Its many scenic features of restful charm, found alongside areas of never ending activity, with weird, grotesque surroundings, surprise one at every turn. Yellowstone lake, the largest sheet of water in America at so high an elevation, with its indented shore line and 140 square miles of surface dotted with forested islands, presents to lovers of nature a series of picturesque landscapes unequaled upon any other inland waters. The far famed falls of the Yellowstone, with their unique and marvelous rock setting, and the Grand canyon, with its majestic outlines and brilliant coloring, are worthy of all the praise bestowed upon them and merit a separate descriptive article. More than a score of waterfalls and cascades, some of them of exquisite grace and beauty, pour the waters of mountain torrents and plateau lakes from the uplands to the lowlands. Many of them well deserve a visit, but their fame is obscured by the real marvels of the Yellowstone. Again, the fossil forests, so seldom visited, tell a most interesting story of a buried plant world, of explosive eruptions of mud volcanoes and the gradual piling up of erupted lavas and ashes. All these, enticing as they seem, appear insignificant when compared with the hydrothermal phenomena displayed in geysers, boiling springs, hot lakes, solfataras and numberless fumaroles, which have gained for the park the appellation of the wonderland of America. Unquestionably it is this hot water treatment which the region has undergone that has developed most of the objects of interest and made the park famous the world over. Even the lake owes much of its attractiveness to its hot springs and paint pots, and the Grand canyon would lack its brilliancy of coloring and its sculptured buttressed walls but for the long continued action of hot as well as cold water.—Arnold Hague in Scribner's.

PITH AND POINT.

No grown person should ever hate a child.

Any man who has money can have lithographs printed claiming a big show.

The trouble with having a good word for everybody is that when you pay a compliment it doesn't count.

We hope we are not lacking in sympathy, but when they tell us that a fat woman is "delicate" we laugh.

After a man has been engaged three or four weeks he begins to find opportunities to take sides in her quarrels.

We don't know what it requires to become skillful at repartee, unless it is to think as quick as when the baby has the croup.

Ever notice how people reach over the preserves after the pickles? And how they insist on passing pickles instead of preserves to others?

Queer Tastes.

Speaking of mysterious tastes, that of a man who was recently before the magistrate at Greenwich is not very easy of explanation. Three weeks ago a legacy of £130 was left to him. The first thing he bought, it seems, was a set of billiard balls, and he now has nothing else left to show for the £130, which has disappeared at the rate of £43 6s. 8d. weekly. Why billiard balls? It is a singular and rather interesting form of craving. It is perhaps true that a billiard ball is one of the very few perfect objects produced by man. It is all of a piece, it is thoroughly homogeneous as regards material, and it is, or should be, faultless in form. Yet only a strong strain of mysticism in the character would account for a man hungering and thirsting for billiard balls above all other earthly things.—London News.

Eyelets Sold by the Million.

"Eyelets," said a manufacturer, "are, like needles, pins and matches, sold by the million instead of by the pound. I don't suppose anybody could tell how many million eyelets are sold every year in New York, but the number is prodigious. Eyelets are made for a variety of uses, from the huge white metal loops sewed into the corners of ships' sails to the tiny eyelets for the dainty slipper of a baby. The greatest number of eyelets made are, of course, for shoes. They are put up in boxes of 100,000, 250,000 and 500,000. Only those proportions are packed. They cost anywhere from $50 to $130 a million."

Overheard on the Pier.

"Is this all?" demanded the custom house inspector as he finished up Binks' trunks.

"Well, no," said Binks. "I got a new wife over in Paris. That little woman over there with the pink cheeks is she."

"All right," said the inspector. "We'll have her appraised. She looks like a work of art."

Saved by Early Instruction.

Trees and Rainfall.

Some persons ask if trees affect rainfall. That question is one on which foresters differ, but the large majority are satisfied they do induce rainfall. Vonmulere, Schenck and many others are emphatic in the claim that forests induce rainfall. It is certain they retain humidity to a great extent, and that alone would affect the rainfall; but the point on which all agree is the value of forests for the conservation of water, preventing floods or drought, distributing the water evenly the whole year. It is a matter of history in foreign countries that when forests have been destroyed the rainfall has been greatly lessened and more spasmodic.—T. P. Lukens in Maxwell's Talisman.

Foliage and Colors.

The colorings of variegated foliage plants cannot be intensified by the use of colored glass. A curious Belgian horticulturist, after a long series of experiments, concludes that brilliant light favors high coloration of foliage. Trees and shrubs with golden leaves, when poorly illuminated—that is, through either blue or red glass—became green or in some cases blanched. In no case did the colored glass have a beneficial effect, most plants after a month's exposure putting forth smaller leaves, less vivid in coloring. In some cases a very apparent stunting of the plant's growth was observable.

Why Popcorn Pops.

Why does popcorn pop? The department of agriculture answers the question, which was propounded to it by a small boy. Popcorn pops by reason of the volatilization of the oil contained in the kernal by heat. Field corn does not pop because the outer portion of the kernel is more porous, permitting the escape of the oil as it volatizes, while in the case of popcorn a great pressure is developed in the kernel by the confined oil and the kernel is suddenly exploded and turned wrong side out.

His Turn Next.

The Iola (Kan.) Register tells of a little girl with the measles. Her dog was in great distress because he could not go to her, and one day he was admitted to the bedchamber. Putting his forefeet on the bed he madly wagged his tail and beamed gladness from every feature. Looking at him a moment, the little girl said angrily, "Oh, you needn't grin; your turn will come next."

Absurd.

Bootmaker (who has a deal of trouble with his customer)—I think, sir, if you were to cut your corns I could more easily find you a pair— Choleric Old Gentleman—Cut my corns, sir! I ask you to fit me a pair of boots to my feet, sir! I'm not going to plane my feet down to fit your boots!

Sample.

"George didn't keep his engagement with me last night," said the girl who was betrothed to him.

"I'd give him a piece of my mind," said her mother.

"Just a little sample of married life," suggested the father.

Widely Read.

MARVELS OF MEMORY

SOME REMARKABLE INSTANCES OF THE POWER OF RECOLLECTION.

An Englishman Whose Wonderful Gift of Retention Brought Dismay to Voltaire—A Reporter Who Did Not Have to Take Notes.

Extraordinary memories have attracted the attention of men in all ages, and in these days a man with a retentive memory is considered to be more or less gifted.

Some good instances of remarkable memories are to be gathered from the records of Greece and Rome. Themistocles, a famous Greek general, is said to have known every citizen in Athens. No doubt Otho, the Roman emperor, owed much of his success to a remarkable memory. He learned the name of every soldier and officer in his army, and this, among other things, rendered him so popular that he was at length acclaimed emperor.

Hortensius, the Roman orator, is said to have been able, after sitting a whole day at a public sale, to give an account from memory of all things sold, with the prices and names of the purchasers.

Coming to later times, the following anecdote affords an instance of wonderful powers of memory: An Englishman went to Frederick the Great of Prussia for the express purpose of giving him an exhibition of his powers of recollection. Frederick sent for Voltaire, who was then residing at the Prussian court. At the king's request Voltaire read a long poem which he had just composed. The Englishman was present and was in such a position that he could hear every word of the poem, though he was concealed from Voltaire's notice. After the reading of the poem Frederick observed to the author that the production could not be an original one, as there was a foreign gentleman present who could recite every word of it. Voltaire listened in amazement to the stranger as he repeated, word for word, the poem which he had been at so much pains in composing, and, giving way to a momentary outbreak of passion, he tore the manuscript in pieces. He was then informed how the Englishman had become acquainted with his poem, and his anger being appeased he was willing to do penance by copying down the work from the second repetition of the stranger, who was able to go through it as before.

There lived in the sixteenth century at Padua a law student who had trained his memory to such a high degree of perfection that he could recite 36,000 words after once hearing them read.

Jedediah Buxton, an illiterate person of the eighteenth century, used to put his memory to a curious use. On one occasion he mentioned the quantity of ale he had drunk free of cost since he was twelve years old and the names of the gentlemen who had given it to him. The whole amounted to 5,116 pints.

As again showing that retentive gifts were not found in the educated alone, there is a notable instance of "Blind Jamie," who lived some years ago in Stirling. He was a poor, uneducated man and totally blind, yet he could actually repeat after a few minutes' consideration any verse required from any part of the Bible, even the obscurest and least important.

An instance of a wager being won by a feat of memory was that of a person who repeated an entire newspaper, advertisements as well, after a single reading.

The power of retaining events has sometimes been manifest in a marked degree. A laboring man named McCartney, at fifty-four years of age, claimed that he could recollect the events of every day for forty years. A test was made by a well known public man who had kept a written record for forty-five years. The man's statement was fully corroborated—indeed, so accurate was his recollection that he could recall without apparent effort the state of the weather on any given day during those forty years.

Another instance of a wager being won by a feat of recollection was that of Mr. Futter, who several years ago was a well known tithe collector in Norfolk. He wagered that he could recollect every word of a sermon that was to be preached and afterward write it out verbatim. He was not seen to take notes and at the close of the sermon retired to a room and wrote out the sermon. On comparison with the manuscript, which the preacher had been asked to bring for the purpose, it was found to vary in one instance only, where a synonym had been used, but in that Mr. Futter was proved to be correct, for the clergyman had a distinct recollection of substituting one word for the other in his delivery.

When reporting was forbidden in the houses of parliament and any one seen to make notes was immediately ejected the speeches, nevertheless, were published in the public press. It was discovered that one Woodfall used to be present in the gallery during the speeches and, sitting with his head between his hands, actually committed the speeches to memory. They were afterward published.

Lord Macaulay had a marvelous facility for remembering what he read. He once declared that if by accident all the copies of Milton's "Paradise Lost" were destroyed he would be able to write out the whole of this long poem without a single error. In fact, he once performed the marvelous feat of repeating the whole poem, making only one omission.

Charles Dickens, after once walking down a street, could remember the names of all the shopkeepers and their businesses.—London Spare Moments.

Telegraph posts along a railway are arranged thirty to the mile.

First came the old fashioned liquid polish, that blacked shoes without shining them. The bottle-and-box combination was an improvement, but meant too much hard work.

"2 In 1" is the perfection of shoe polishes. It's a Paste that embraces the good points of all other polishes, with none of their faults. One application—one rubbing—and the shoes are shined. It's made of pure oils, that preserve the leather. Contains no acids or turpentine.

ENGLAND'S DAY.

When every sea is sounded
 When every land is sown,
Each furthest headland rounded,
 Each soaring summit known;

When the forces of creation
 And the Elements pay toll,
And the stars sing exultation
 To the Jack at either pole;

When every human burden
 Finds an Englishman to bear,
Each quest that gives no guerdon
 An Englishman to dare;

When all man's laws are stable,
 And no man's withers wrung;
When the thousand sons of Babel
 Praise God in Shakespeare's tongue.

• • • • •

When we've broken every fetter,
 When the world is filled with light,
When there's nothing left to better
 And there's no one left to fight;

When we've drained the cup of sadness,
 Touched the topmost rung of fame,
Taught the world to throb with gladness
 At the whisper of our name;

When all the trials are broken
 And all the wrongs set right,
And all God's message spoken,
 Then Englishmen, good-night.

LACROSSE.

Must Have Been a Warm Game.

There was a lacrosse match at Tweed a short time ago, which broke up in a row, and the Tweed News asked several leading citizens their opinions of the match and its incidents. One of them, Mr. C. W. Craig, replied as follows:

"I was a spectator at the lacrosse game on Friday last, and was obliged to be a witness to the unfortunate occurrences connected therewith. The Tweed players conducted themselves as gentlemen in the face of provocation and are entitled to credit for it. It is regrettable that a number of their supporters did not have equal good sense. Some of the spectators seemed to think that the friends of the Havelock team had no right to cheer for their men, and their attempt to suppress cheering by the Havelock supporters was entirely unwarrantable, and appeared to be the first cause of trouble. Such conduct as this displays a lack of perception of the principles upon which a game of sports ought to be conducted. No respectable person will willingly countenance by his presence such an exhibition as was enacted on this occasion; and the action of these enthusiasts, instead of benefitting their cause, can only create disgust in the minds of all lovers of true sport. The spectacle of a mob of several hundred persons pursuing a single man, like a pack of wolves, was disgraceful, and such conduct will do more to kill true sport in this town than anything else that can be suggested. The referee was blameworthy, as he should have ruled off the Havelock player who deliberately and repeatedly struck his opponents with his stick. The referee apparently considered it to be sufficient punishment to rule the offender off for a couple of minutes, so as to give him a rest, and enable him to repeat the offence with renewed vigor. But this unfairness of the referee was no excuse for the action of a part of the spectators. Lacrosse is a good game, and when decently played will receive a good public support and following. But until the residents of Tweed have some assurance, which they do not possess, that they will be able to witness a game fairly played, and with decent conduct preserved among the spectators, lacrosse and other sports have suffered a serious blow in this place."

SPORTING NOTES.

The Toronto baseball club has a new manager. If they only had about nine new players now.

The Bounders, of this city, expect to play in Frankford next Wednesday.

Darkey, a horse known in this district, trotted a mile in 2.12 1-2 in Goderich yesterday.

Should the New York National League club win the pennant in that organization this season the team will be taken on a trip round the world. Such is the plan of John T. Brush, owner of the Giants.

SHOCKING AFFAIR IN NORTH HASTINGS.

EIGHT MINERS, WITH AXES, ATTACK A MAN AND WOUND HIM TERRIBLY.

Bancroft Reporter: William Welsh was the victim of a shocking tragedy at Craigmount mines last Sunday night. Eight of the miners, principally of those recently from Cordova, while under the influence of liquor, attacked him with knives and an axe, cutting him badly on one arm and about the head and face. Thirty stitches were needed to close the wounds. He lies in a very critical condition

The parties were all arrested and the trial was in progress yesterday.

Welsh is much respected and the citizens, in their sympathy for him, could hardly refrain from taking steps to avenge the brutal act.

HONORED BY HIS CAMP.

SONS OF SCOTLAND SAY GOOD BYE TO A DEPARTING BROTHER.

At a regular meeting of Camp Rob Roy, No. 43, held last evening, the following resolution in reference to a departing brother was unanimously adopted:

"That this Camp regrets very much the departure of our Bro. McMillan, who is leaving the city to take charge of a fast train between Peterboro and Toronto, and would place upon our books our appreciation of his sterling character and great moral worth. We have found him a valued member of our Camp and of our city. We have benefitted by his caution, and his advice has often been helpful to us; and that while we shall feel his loss we cannot but rejoice at the promotion which the great corporation of which he is an employee has been pleased to give him."

A Halt Called in Montreal.

In Montreal the City Council has instructed the police to arrest all automobilists who run more than the statutory speed of six miles an hour, and the Herald, commenting on it, says:

"The decision of the Police Committee to check the mad haste of the automobile enthusiast should meet with general approval. Knowing that the authorities could at any moment interfere with their racing propensities, certain autoists have been gradually increasing the speed at which they drive their machine, until the power limit has been reached. The result has been that citizens are in constant danger of being mutilated or killed. For several weeks some auto drivers have stopped at nothing; they tear along crowded thoroughfares, squeeze in between cars, and show not the slightest respect to the rights of pedestrians. Perhaps, after two or three owners have appeared in court and made a contribution to the city treasury, the nuisance may abate. There is nothing like a good example, and when the police have held up a few reckless drivers the rest of the population may again move about the streets in comparative security and comfort."
